

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

ye T 834.510.515

Harvard College Library

FROM

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT LIBRARY

3 2044 097 041 941

1371

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD

A TALE

SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY HIMSELF

BY
OLIVER GOLDSMITH

Sperate miseri, cavete felices

EDITED BY
JAMES GILBERT RIGGS, A.M.
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS, PLATTSBURGH, N.Y.

LEACH, SHEWELL, & SANBORN,
BOSTON. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

EdueT 834.510,515

COPYRIGHT, 1896,
BY LEACH, SHEWELL, & SANBORN.

TIPOGRAPHY BY C. J. PETERS & SON, BOSTON.

PRESSWORK BY BERWICK & SMITH.

PREFACE.

---

THIS book is prepared more especially for the use of students in academies and high schools, but it is hoped that it may not be unwelcome to any who find enjoyment in this masterpiece of Goldsmith's authorship. The text is that of the fifth edition, printed in 1774, and contains Goldsmith's modifications of the language of the first edition. Some of the more valuable comments which otherwise might not be easily accessible are introduced. It is not intended that the notes shall be so full as to take from the teacher or pupil a due share of work, but rather to offer aid and suggestion on points which are more or less obscure. Where Dr. Samuel Johnson's Dictionary of the English Language, which gives the usage of Goldsmith's time, could furnish a definition, it has been inserted.

Grateful acknowledgment is made to Warren Fenno Gregory, A.M., for the Biographical Sketch and Literary Productions of Oliver Goldsmith, which appear in his edition of the Traveller and Deserted Village, in this series of publications; and to Professor John F. Genung of Amherst College for reading the manuscript of the notes.

“Innocently to amuse the imagination in this dream of life is wisdom,” wrote Goldsmith. If this form of his Vicar of Wakefield shall facilitate the healthy play of the reader’s imagination, the purpose of the book is accomplished.

JAMES GILBERT RIGGS.

PLATTSBURGH, N.Y., October, 1896.

CONTENTS.

---

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	iii
BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH . . . . .	1
LITERARY PRODUCTIONS OF OLIVER GOLDSMITH . . . . .	14
INTRODUCTION TO THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD . . . . .	17
CRITICAL COMMENTS . . . . .	21
(Goethe, Irving, Thackeray, Black.)
ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION . . . . .	27
TEXT . . . . .	29
NOTES . . . . .	281

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

(1728-1774.)

---

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

THE life of "POOR GOLDSMITH," as he has been familiarly and affectionately called, illustrates to a singular degree the force of family traits. He inherited a combination of goodness of heart, simplicity of mind, and faculty for enjoying the present in a spirit of abandon; blended with much shrewdness of observation, a rollicking Irish sense of humor, and a proverbial gift for blundering in conversation. This being the case, the conditions were right for producing one of the most helpless, thriftless, disappointing, and at the same time brilliant and lovable of all our authors.

The place of his birth is usually given as Pallas, County Longford, Ireland, the date being Nov. 10, 1728; and he was the fifth of the eight children of Charles and Ann Goldsmith. His father was at this time curate to the rector of Kilkenny West, with an income of not over £40 annually. In 1730 he succeeded his wife's uncle as rector, and settled in the pretty village of Lissoy, having now £200 a year. Little Oliver was sent to a "dame's school" at the age of three, and impressed the mistress as being one of the dullest boys she had ever met with. At six he was sent to the village school, kept by Thomas Byrne, an old soldier who had more fondness for fairy lore and tales of war than for the usual branches. Such instruction would not make an accurate scholar of a boy with his imaginative mind; but it cultivated a poetic taste, besides filling him with a burning desire for travel and adventure. A severe attack of the small-pox broke off his attendance here, after which he was sent to a better school. His father's means were straitened by keeping an elder son, Henry, at a classical school; but relatives, especially his uncle, Rev. Thomas Contarine, helped him to schools which prepared him for the University. His school-life was varied; on the one hand, he was careless and dull in all studies requiring steady thought, while his short, thick, ungainly figure, his never handsome features, pitted with the marks of disease, and his chronic blundering brought him in among the boys for a full share of ridicule, to which his natural sensitiveness and self-consciousness rendered him all the more liable. On the other hand, his fondness for the Latin poets secured kindly attention from his teachers, while his generous heart and fondness for sports brought the good-will of his mates, even if they did at times make merry at his expense.

One of many anecdotes may be introduced here. On his way home from his last fitting-school, supplied by friends with a horse and a guinea, he determined to play the man at an inn. He was sent as a joke to the house of a prominent family. These people kindly allowed the mistake to go on, so that Goldsmith swaggered through the whole performance, only to learn the true state of things next morning, to his great mortification. He afterwards used this occurrence upon which to base his comedy, She Stoops to Conquer, or the Mistakes of a Night.

College came next; but his sister Catherine had privately married the son of a rich neighbor, and family pride prompted his father to raise a dowry of £400. This so reduced his resources that Oliver had to enter Trinity College, Dublin, as a "sizar," or poor-student, who worked in part payment of his expenses, and was distinguished by his dress. He felt the humiliation, but contrived to be merry in a happy-go-lucky way. He was fond of the flute, and played by ear with considerable sweetness. His father died in 1747; but his Uncle Contarine helped him at times, and he struggled on, sometimes writing street-ballads for sale, and again pawning his books. His nature fitted him for getting into trouble, and he was once admonished for aiding in a riot in which a bailiff was ducked and some lives lost in the attempted storming of a jail. At another time he ran away to Cork after being caned by a tutor for giving a dance in his room. He had no money to go farther; and his brother Henry arranged his return, after which he succeeded in taking the degree of B.A. in 1749.

The next thing was the choice of a profession for the idle fellow who was living on his friends, enjoying himself at rustic merry-makings, and learning French from priests. He was first designed for the church, and after two years of probation was rejected by the bishop. It is said that this was for presenting himself for orders while wearing scarlet breeches. After trying and giving up a tutorship, his relatives raised £50 for him, and with great satisfaction, no doubt, saw him mounted on a good horse, and starting for Cork to embark for America, only to have him return on a wretched beast and without a penny, having lost all in his reckless adventures. Law was the next in order, and good Uncle Contarine raised £50 more to start him as a lawyer in London. He came back as usual, after losing his money gambling in Dublin. The only profession left to try was that of medicine; and, supplied again with a moderate sum, he started for the medical school at Edinburgh, this time never to return.

After eighteen months of desultory work here, he wished to study abroad, and with more money from his faithful uncle he arrived in Holland after sundry misfortunes. A fellow-countryman befriended him in Leyden, but afterwards advised him to leave, as gamblers, who were taking all he had, were getting too strong a hold on him. He then started for Paris with his flute, a guinea, and an extra shirt. He wandered through France and Switzerland, chiefly on foot, playing on his flute many times to secure food and lodging from the peasants. In Italy, the land of music, this would not avail; and he is said to have taken part in disputes, or debates, at universities and convents, where the contestant would be entitled to a supper and a bed. While at Padua, where some claim that he took the degree of Bachelor of Medicine, while others say that he had previously taken it at Louvain in France, his Uncle Contarine died, and his irregular and scanty remittances of money now ceased entirely, so that he retraced his wanderings.

He arrived at Dover in 1756 in complete destitution; and while his improvidence made all his life a hard one, the next five years were peculiarly distressing, being wholly devoid of the compensations which his subsequent fame brought. He appears to have sought in vain for a place as chemist's assistant, and is said to have tried the stage, in a humble way, for a brief period. There is no definite account of his life at this time, but it is evident that he drifted towards London in a state of beggary. Here he is known to have been employed in a school, and then in a chemist's laboratory. A good

Quaker physician, who had been a fellow-student at Edinburgh, encouraged him to practise medicine, which he did for a time in the suburbs, but unprofitably, as his patients were mainly among the poor, and could not pay him. His friend, Dr. Sleigh, helped him to a little writing for the booksellers; and a patient who was a printer for Samuel Richardson, a rich publisher, and also author of Pamela and other novels, secured for him an introduction to his employer. Richardson gave a little work, and helped him to make some acquaintances, among whom was Dr. Young, author of Night Thoughts. Another friend was Dr. Milner, also from Edinburgh, whose father kept a classical school, of which Goldsmith, now giving up medicine, was placed in charge during the proprietor's illness. While with the Milners he met Griffiths, a bookseller, who published the Monthly Review. Goldsmith was given employment on this in 1757 at a small salary, and was thus fairly started as a literary drudge. He could not long endure the exactions of the employer and his wife; and now, having a little acquaintance with publishers, he shifted for himself, doing any writing that came his way. The Milners tried to befriend him again, and secured for him the appointment as post-surgeon on the coast of Coromandel. This was revoked, however; a second attempt to practise medicine proved unprofitable; he failed to pass an examination for a subordinate hospital position at the College of Surgeons, and was still in most abject poverty. Yet he was continually giving money if he had it, or even the clothes from his back and the coverings from his bed, to those who begged of him. His writings were of whatever sort would bring him money, and he had as yet produced nothing to bring him into prominence.

In 1759 he published anonymously An Inquiry into the Present State of Polite Learning in Europe, which he had long been meditating, and in 1760 his Chinese Letters appeared. The money from these enabled Goldsmith to change his wretched garret for better quarters; and, what was more, he now drew to himself valuable friends, the chief among whom was the eccentric intellectual giant, Samuel Johnson, afterwards Dr. Johnson, who was an autocrat among his literary companions, and had himself known the most grinding poverty. Goldsmith's circumstances were indeed better, but his habits still kept him in want; and Dr. Johnson told of receiving a message from him saying that he was in great distress, and begging a visit, as he could not come to his friend. Dr. Johnson sent a guinea, and followed as quickly as possible to find Goldsmith under arrest in his room for arrears of rent. A fresh bottle of Madeira wine on the table showed how a portion of the guinea had already been used. Johnson promptly corked the bottle and calmed his excited friend. Upon being informed by Goldsmith that he had an unpublished manuscript by him, he at once examined it and saw its merit. He immediately sold this for £60, with which the rent was discharged, the landlady receiving an indignant lecture as well as her money. This manuscript was the copy of the Vicar of Wakefield published two years after.

So much of our remembrance of Goldsmith is associated with the immortal "Club," that special mention must be made of this. It was formed in 1764, and consisted of nine members, who were to sup together once a week at the Turk's Head. Some of the leading ones besides our poet were Johnson, already mentioned, Joshua Reynolds, the eminent painter, Burke, the future orator, and Beauclerc, a polished aristocrat, whose appearance contrasted oddly with that of some others, but who had a fine literary taste, and admired Johnson. To these were afterwards added Garrick, the actor, and Boswell, the son of a Scotch laird, who worshipped the great Johnson, sticking to him, as Goldsmith said, like a "burr," to treasure up his sayings in his memory or his note-book, and who has perpetuated the remembrance of his eminent friend and made his own otherwise insignificant name live by leaving the most complete biography ever issued. We gain much knowledge of Goldsmith from these pages, always making due allowance for the narrow-mindedness and jealousy of Boswell, who could not appreciate the poet as did the great man whom he followed.

This year, 1764, was the most important one in all Goldsmith's literary career. He had hitherto left all his writings without signature, but he now brought out the Traveller under his own name. The effect of this great poem on the public was immediate, bringing its author to the notice of those who had not known him, and totally changing the estimation of him in the minds of those who had. His club-mates were astounded. They had recognized ability in the man, in spite of his clumsiness in conversation, but now realized that he possessed genius, and that of the highest order. Within a year Goldsmith was called the best poet of his age. Dr. Johnson pronounced the Traveller the best effort in verse since the days of Pope; while the finest compliment of all came from Miss Reynolds, the sister of the painter, who said, "Well, I never more shall think Dr. Goldsmith ugly!"

With all this success and the attendant social advantages that came with it, Goldsmith felt that he was rising in the world, and revived some of his earlier papers in a collection called Essays by Mr. Goldsmith. He also changed lodgings again and lived with more pretension, but was still, as ever, often in want. No income could have kept pace with the way in which his generous and heedless nature would have led him to use it. He always gambled more or less, as was the fashion, and was rarely successful; but the sweeping charges of Macaulay and others on this point cannot be sustained. His disregard of expense, and habit of giving at every appeal of real or pretended distress, especially to needy countrymen of his own who flocked to him, were enough to account for the financial embarrassment which followed him, even when he came to earn perhaps £400 yearly, a large sum in those days.

In 1765, when pressed for funds, he wrote, among others, the famous nursery tale of Goody Two Shoes, which in its own field has enjoyed as much popularity as any of his writings.

He never yet had regarded himself as permanently given up to writing; and now his increased acquaintance tempted him to the practice of medicine once more, this time in a grand way with all the gayly-colored finery of the period, but this was given up in disgust upon finding that the apothecary knew more about prescribing for a case than he did. As is so often the case, the world had settled the question of an occupation, and he never again attempted to anything but an author.

The fame of the Traveller caused the Vicar of Wakefield to be issued after lying in the publisher's hands for two years. This added still more to his reputation, and he was now a distinguished man. Enemies had arisen, to be sure; but his social opportunities were of the best, although his natural awkwardness, never wholly to be overcome except in his writings, and his crude earlier life, placed him at a disadvantage.

He now turned his attention to another style of writing; and his comedy, The Good-Natured Man, was produced in 1768. Its reception was disappointing in many ways. It was a sentimental age, and true comedy was not appreciated; but there was a compensation in the fact that the total profit was £500, while the Traveller, with all its fame, brought but twenty. In a characteristic way, Goldsmith at once used the most of this money in fitting up luxurious apartments, and was really worse off than ever, as the scale of living he adopted, in the hope of continuing to earn at this rate, kept him plunged in debt for the remainder of his life.

He was now saddened by the death of his brother Henry, a careful scholar and exemplary man, who, after his university career, had abandoned thoughts of fame to settle down at Lissoy as pastor, and teacher of the village school, "passing rich at forty pounds a year." Oliver loved this brother with all the warmth of his heart; and when there had been an opportunity for patronage from the Duke of Northumberland, he had thrown away his own chances, sturdily disclaiming all need for himself, but mentioning his brother, and by his natural bungling and diffidence securing nothing for either.

We now come to an episode in Goldsmith's life which affords the tenderest memories, and has especially appealed to Irving and Thackeray, who of all writers upon this poet are from the gentleness of their own natures the most truly appreciative. This is his acquaintance with the "Jessamy Bride," a pet name applied to Miss Mary Horneck, the younger of two beautiful daughters of Mrs. Horneck of Devonshire. Goldsmith met this fine family through his friend

Reynolds, and formed one of the pleasantest friendships of all his restless life. He had at last met people of culture and position who could understand him rightly. Goldsmith never openly paid addresses to this lady; but Irving suspects that the heavy tailor's charges on record for gaudy costumes arose from a realization of his own uncouthness, and a desire to make himself attractive in the eyes of one he adored. There is something very touching in the thought of a hopeless devotion, such as may have existed here; and we well may think that had Goldsmith, with his fine appreciation of home-life, always dear to him and always denied, been able to win the love of such a woman, we might now write of a longer and very different life. It is pleasing to know that years after, the "Jessamy Bride," an aged but still charming woman, the widow of a distinguished general, paid a feeling tribute to the memory of her friend.

In 1768 the Royal Academy of Arts was instituted under the patronage of the king and the supervision of forty leading artists. Reynolds was its president, and received the honor of knighthood, to the great delight of the Club; and the next year Johnson received from this Academy the honorary title of Professor of Ancient Literature, and Goldsmith that of Professor of Ancient History. No salary went with this, and the recipient himself wrote to his brother Maurice that such honors were to one in his situation "something like ruffles to one wanting a shirt;" but it was a high mark of distinction, the greatest of his life.

In 1770 the Deserted Village appeared, bringing him one hundred guineas and additional reputation. He had now become more at ease in polite society; and we soon find him indulging in an excursion to Paris with the Hornecks, a journey which must have seemed very different from his first vagrant ramblings in France.

In 1773 he scored a triumphal success with his comedy, She Stoops to Conquer; and we should be glad to think of him as thoroughly happy with all these laurels, but we are forced to notice another side. After his return from France, he had sought retirement at a farmhouse to catch up with the work, now fast getting beyond him, an all the more hopeless task because he was now often paid in advance, and the money would be spent as soon as he received it. His devotion to work here impaired his health, his pecuniary embarrassments increased, and there were never wanting envious and ill-natured critics, and those who would mortify his vanity by practical jokes at the expense of his personal appearance. As a relief from all these annoyances, he indulged in social excesses upon his return to town, with the result of further enfeebling himself. The end was coming.

He now wished to repair his fortunes by a more elaborate work than any he had yet attempted. His dream was of a dictionary of arts and sciences, for which Dr. Johnson would write on ethics, Burke on politics, Reynolds on painting, Garrick on acting, and others of note on other subjects, while Goldsmith would be editor. It was a promising undertaking if carried out, but the booksellers shrank from it. It would occupy several volumes, and they distrusted both the profit, and the prospect of completion. Then, again, work for which they had already paid would be laid aside for it. Disappointed and no longer as capable as formerly, Goldsmith settled down to forced work which was remorselessly driving him, and which was more irksome than ever. One more awakening of his former brilliancy remains in his unfinished poem Retaliation, inspired by mock epitaphs written for him by his companions, one of which by Garrick was especially apt and therefore stinging : —

“ Here lies poet Goldsmith, for shortness called Noll,
Who wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll.”

Garrick received one in return that fully repaid him, while the poet's finest effort was saved for Reynolds, for whom he had only kindness : —

“ Here Reynolds is laid, and to tell you my mind,
He has not left a wiser or better behind.
His pencil was striking, resistless, and grand ;
His manners were gentle, complying, and bland ;
Still born to improve us in every part,
His pencil our faces, his manners our heart.
To coxcombs averse, yet most civilly steering,
When they judged without skill, he was still hard of hearing ;
When they talked of their Raphaels, Correggios, and stuff,
He shifted his trumpet, and only took snuff.
By flattery unspoiled ” —

Goldsmith's work ended here, and worthily, with this unfinished line. He sank in a fever, and died April 4, 1774. Burke burst into tears on hearing the news, Reynolds could work no more that day, and the contemptuous amusement with which the poor fellow's social efforts had often been regarded was lost sight of in the general grief. His financial condition (he was said to be £2,000 in debt) prevented his having a public funeral ; but the Club not long after placed a medallion with his likeness in Westminster Abbey, beneath which was inscribed a noble epitaph in Latin by Dr. Johnson.

As a scholar, Goldsmith was superficial and careless ; as a man, we have seen him noble-hearted, but weak and erring ; but as a literary artist, he remains in the front rank for his purity of thought, beauty of expression, and power to charm. In discussing his varied life, we must not make the mistake of supposing that Goldsmith stands alone. The Bohemian existence that he led was common among literary workers, and the fact that Goldsmith is often singled out as a type of irregular life among writers simply results from his being better known to us than most others of his time. We can in no wise hold his life up for imitation, while, on the other hand, there is no call to offer apologies for his errors. With his simplicity and native goodness, which no accusations on the part of those who charge him with envy can refute, his failings are more those of the child, which we regard the more kindly for its evident inability to care for itself, than those of a culprit whom we would censure. Let Goldsmith stand before us as he was, with no more excuse than his own frank nature would have sought. Irving is to be commended, who would correct Dr. Johnson's counsel: "Let not his faults be remembered, he was a very great man," by saying with a truer grasp of human nature, "Let them be remembered, since their tendency is to endear."

LITERARY PRODUCTIONS

OF

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

---

“AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRESENT STATE OF POLITE LEARNING IN EUROPE” (1759). His first work of importance, and published anonymously. It was severely treated by critics, and is generally considered to have little merit; but at the time it sold profitably on account of the novelty of the undertaking, and its wide range.

“THE BEE” (1759). A weekly publication, of which only eight numbers were issued.

“SKETCHES FROM LONDON” (1760). Usually spoken of as the Chinese Letters, being a series of letters, more than a hundred in number, appearing in the Public Ledger, and purporting to be written by a Chinese visitor to London. A mysterious “Man in Black,” who gives information to the visitor, is sometimes identified with Goldsmith, and sometimes with his father, but is probably not definitely intended for either. It was Goldsmith’s habit to draw characters from his own knowledge rather than from imagination, and in this way family likenesses often appear. These letters were collected next year under the title of the Citizen of the World. Their shrewd, yet pleasant, satire upon the follies and evils of society commanded attention, and subsequent years have proven the wisdom of many of his observations and protests, which were unappreciated at the time.

"HISTORY OF ENGLAND" (1763). In the form of a series of letters from a nobleman to his son. A compilation of existing histories, rewritten in a pleasing way. Superficial and often incorrect, but so graceful that the letters were at first thought to be those of Lord Chesterfield. It was even spoken of as "the most finished and elegant summary of English history that had ever been, or was likely to be written."

"THE TRAVELLER, OR A PROSPECT OF SOCIETY" (1764).

"ESSAYS BY MR. GOLDSMITH" (1765). A collection of earlier anonymous papers made up from various periodicals.

"THE HERMIT, OR EDWIN AND ANGELINA" (1765). A shorter poem of great power and beauty, published under the patronage of the Countess of Northumberland, thus having an introduction to the world which was of great advantage to Goldsmith. It was afterwards printed in the Vicar of Wakefield. It has been called "the most finished of modern ballads."

"THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD" (1766). See introduction.

"THE GOOD-NATURED MAN" (1768). A comedy illustrating many of Goldsmith's own traits. Produced at Covent Garden with indifferent success in some respects, but a total profit of £500.

"HISTORY OF THE EARTH AND ANIMATED NATURE" (begun in 1769). This was to be a work on natural history, produced for Griffiths, the bookseller, in eight volumes of 400 pages each. A hundred guineas were to be paid for the delivery of each volume in manuscript. The series was never completed. This work is interesting, but less valuable than his other writings. Facts are confused with the impossible stories of travellers, Goldsmith's credulity and lack of accurate knowledge making him an easy dupe. At the same time, it tells in a delightful way many a pleasing thing of his own observation.

"HISTORY OF ROME" (1769). Designed for students' use, and not the result of original research, but drawn from ponderous books whose contents were compiled, condensed, and rewritten in his own easy style, and thus made available for the young. In this way great service was done. Though suffering more or less from the author's carelessness and lack of thorough information, the book had so many good points that, like his History of England, it long continued to be a standard.

"THE DESERTED VILLAGE" (1770).

"HISTORY OF ENGLAND" (1771). Largely a reproduction of his former one. It was well received, some critics declaring that English history had never before been "so usefully, so elegantly, and so agreeably epitomized."

"SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER, OR THE MISTAKES OF A NIGHT" (1773). A comedy based on blunders of Goldsmith's own. Its production at Covent Garden was, after a long delay, secured by the aid of Dr. Johnson, to whom the author affectionately dedicated the play when put to press. It proved very successful, bringing £800, and has lived.

"HISTORY OF GREECE" (1774). Prepared in the same way as his other histories.

"RETALIATION" (1774). An unfinished poem, said to be his last work. See Biographical Sketch.

"A SURVEY OF EXPERIMENTAL PHILOSOPHY" (1776). A forced work under the pressure of debt, and needing no comment. As Goldsmith published nothing after 1773, the authorship of this is given on the authority of the publishers.

Besides these he left many lives of various persons, introductions to books, translations, poems, and miscellaneous articles, as he was a very prolific writer. These were mostly "hack-work," done to procure the means of living, or of satisfying his creditors, and need no special reviewing here.

His poems were first brought out in London in two volumes, in 1780. His miscellaneous works were brought out in four volumes in 1801, edited by S. Rose, with a memoir by Bishop Percy.

INTRODUCTION.

---

It may add to our interest in the Vicar of Wakefield to know that in France there are as many as seven different translations of it, that it is popular in Germany and Italy, and is the first English book prescribed for those who are learning our language on the Continent. The qualities which make it desirable for this purpose are the same which have made it a classic in its native tongue.

Goldsmith was thirty-seven when the Vicar of Wakefield was published, the manuscript having been in the printer's hands two years. By this time he had become known and admired as the author of An Inquiry into the Present State of Polite Learning in Europe, Citizen of the World, The Traveller, and a volume of Essays. Much of his time hitherto had been engrossed with compilations and "obscure hack-work for publishers," — a class of writings which brought him little more than a living. From this task-work he found respite at intervals for slow and careful writing, now on his poem, The Traveller, and now on the Vicar of Wakefield. Dependent on his pen, living in surroundings which were suggestive of poverty and drudgery, he still felt the capabilities of genius within, and, like many another, found relief and gratification in that literary work which brought him most fame.

His Muse was his memory of earlier days. In his cheerless lodgings at Islington, a suburb of London, his mind took excursions to his native Ireland, retraced his Continental route, or recalled the ways and words of those whom once he knew. He put all this before us, not as it really was, but embellished by the simple idyllic beauty which takes the poet's eye. The characters which people his story are real, and the settings what he saw, and a large part of which he was. Out of full experience he writes, and so the narration has the true feeling and naturalness that charm the fancy and capture the affection. If he dwells upon the misfortunes of a debtor, none knew better than he the slavery of one who owes; if George is made to tell of his wanderings and precarious manner of living, there is little fiction in the account, and Oliver might be substituted for George; if Dr. Primrose never misses a chance to teach a moral lesson, it is the recollection of Goldsmith's revered father which furnishes the character and the precepts; if the author makes us love generosity and admire simplicity, it is from his own soul's benevolence and humility that he draws his inspiration; if he reveals to us the sanctities of the domestic hearth, they are but reflections from the glowing fireside of his childhood.

When Dr. Johnson accomplished the sale of the Vicar of Wakefield for £60, he said the price was sufficient, "for then the fame of Goldsmith had not been elevated as it afterwards was by his Traveller; and the bookseller had such faint hopes of profit by his bargain that he kept the manuscript by him a long time, and did not publish it until The Traveller had appeared. Then, to be sure, it was accidentally worth more money." It was a time when authors were dependent on the whims of their publishers. But when the book did appear, in 1766, it went through three editions. The sixth was published the year Goldsmith died. At the time of its first appearance the journals of the day gave it little advertisement, simply stating, without praise or criticism, that a new novel was before the public.

Yet it made its way, not because Goldsmith had written it, but by reason of its domesticity and the simple idyllic charm which attracts in any age. The story of good prevailing over evil as he told it was new-old, and the tale of sure reward for patient submission in adversity is as ancient as the Book of Job. Its motive is to enforce the truth that heroism of soul may rise triumphant over the vanities and trials of daily life.

In its fidelity to life, its pictures of vice and virtue, it holds the mirror up to nature. Its human interest appeals to the reader; and its portraiture is so suggestive that painters like Wilkie, Leslie, and Mulready have found in it subjects for their brushes, as "The Haymaking," "Moses fitted out for the Fair," and "Choosing the Wedding Gown."

A pure and flowing style marks all of Goldsmith's writings. He tried poetry, comedy, fiction, history, essays, and science; and we have Dr. Johnson's own word in the epitaph he wrote for his friend that "he touched nothing that he did not adorn." The lightness and grace of his sentences, a strong contrast to the heavy, high-sounding phrases of the conventional novels, were the qualities of genius which Dr. Johnson could detect at a glance in the Vicar of Wakefield. Their ease and balance give them the flow of ready conversation, of which Goldsmith was a master at his desk, though a very butt of wit for his diffidence in company. Metaphor and contrast he often employs. Epigram is his native speech. The sly stroke of wit suggested by events which have a flavor of personal experience gives evidence of his Irish origin. Follies, however, are not a target for his fun. With a tenderness born of a love for his fellows, he is quick to console and relieve; and where he is powerless, he suffers with the wretched. His pathos has the quality which knocks at our hearts and claims entrance.

The work has its defects, which the author acknowledges, and they are not hard to find. When the story takes some extravagant turns, and suggests some improbable episodes, we will remember it is the "mild eccentric," as Professor Masson calls him, who is telling the story, and be indulgent. Who will attempt to write with fewer faults a pastoral home-tale of equal purity which can claim the designation of a classic? Its merit is that it not only amuses us, but corrects and instructs our conscience, and sets going a sympathetic heart-beat for humanity. Its simple and easy style will be an abiding delight to its readers. But as Oliver Goldsmith's compassionate nature entitles him to be remembered as the man before the artist, so the fame of his only novel rests rather on its interpretation of life's meaning than on its delicacy of expression.

CRITICAL COMMENTS.

---

[FROM GOETHE'S Dichtung und Wahrheit.]

A PROTESTANT country clergyman is perhaps the most beautiful subject for a modern idyl; he appears, like Melchizedec, as priest and king in one person. To the most innocent situation which can be imagined on earth, to that of a husbandman, he is, for the most part, united by similarity of occupation as well as by equality in family relationships; he is a father, a master of a family, an agriculturist, and thus perfectly a member of the community. On this pure, beautiful, earthly foundation rests his higher calling; to him is it given to guide men through life, to take care of their spiritual education, to bless them at all the leading epochs of their existence; to instruct, to strengthen, to console them; and if consolation is not sufficient for the present, to call up and guarantee the hope of a happier future. . . .

The delineation of this character on his course of life through joys and sorrows, the ever-increasing interest of the story, by the combination of the entirely natural with the strange and the singular, make this novel one of the best which has ever been written. Besides this, it has the great advantage that it is quite moral, nay, in a pure sense, Christian — represents the reward of a good-will and perseverance in the right, strengthens an unconditional confidence in God, and attests the final triumph of good over evil; and all this without a trace of cant or pedantry. The author was preserved from both of these by an elevation of mind that shows itself throughout in the form of irony, by which this little work must appear to us as wise as it is amiable. The author, Dr. Goldsmith, has, without question, a great insight into the moral world, into its strength and its infirmities; but at the same time he can thankfully acknowledge that he is an Englishman, and reckon highly the advantages which his country and his nation afford him. The family, with the delineation of which he occupies himself, stands upon one of the last steps of citizen comfort, and yet comes in contact with the highest; its narrow circle, which becomes still more contracted, touches upon the great world through the natural and civil course of things; this little skiff floats on the agitated waves of English life, and in weal or woe it has to expect injury or help from the vast fleet which sails around it.

---

[FROM IRVING'S Life of Goldsmith.]

SIXTY guineas for the Vicar of Wakefield! and this could be pronounced no mean price by Dr. Johnson, at that time the arbiter of English talent, and who had had an opportunity of witnessing the effect of the work upon the public mind; for its success was immediate. It came out on the 27th of March, 1766; before the end of May a second edition was called for; in three months more, a third; and so it went on, widening in a popularity that has never flagged. . . . Though so exclusively a picture of British scenes and manners, it has been translated into almost every language; and everywhere its charm has been the same. Goethe, the great genius of Germany, declared, in his eighty-first year, that it was his delight at the age of twenty, that it had in a manner formed a part of his education, influencing his taste and feelings throughout life, and that he had recently read it again from beginning to end with renewed delight, and with a grateful sense of the early benefit derived from it.

It is needless to expatiate upon the qualities of a work which has thus passed from country to country, and language to language, until it is now known throughout the whole reading world and is become a household book in every hand. The secret of its universal and enduring popularity is undoubtedly its truth to nature, but to nature of the most amiable kind, to nature such as Goldsmith saw it. The author, as we have occasionally shown in the course of this memoir, took his scenes and characters, in this as in his other writings, from originals in his own motley experience; but he has given them as seen through the medium of his own indulgent eye, and has set them forth with the colorings of his own good head and heart. Yet how contradictory it seems that this, one of the most delightful pictures of home and home-felt happiness, should be drawn by a homeless man! that the most amiable picture of domestic virtue and all the endearments of the married state should be drawn by a bachelor, who had been severed from domestic life almost from boyhood! that one of the most tender, touching, and affecting appeals on behalf of female loveliness, should have been made by a man whose deficiency in all the graces of person and manner seemed to mark him out for a cynical disparager of the sex!

[FROM THACKERAY'S English Humorists.]

WHO, of the millions whom he has amused, doesn't love him? To be the most beloved of English writers — what a title is that for a man! A wild youth, wayward, but full of tenderness and affection, quits the country village where his boyhood has been passed in happy musings, in idle shelter, in fond longing to see the great world out of doors, and achieve name and fortune — and after years of dire struggle, and neglect and poverty, his heart turning back as fondly to his native place as it had longed eagerly for change when sheltered there, he writes a book and a poem [Vicar of Wakefield and Deserted Village], full of the recollections and feelings of home — he paints the friends and scenes of his youth, and peoples Auburn and Wakefield with remembrances of Lissoy. Wander he must; but he carries away a home-relic with him, and dies with it on his breast. His nature is truant; in repose it longs for change; as on the journey it looks back for friends and quiet. He passes to-day in building an air-castle for to-morrow, or in writing yesterday's elegy; and he would fly away this hour but that a cage and necessity keep him. What is the charm of his verse, of his style and humor? His sweet regrets, his delicate compassion, his soft smile, his tremulous sympathy, the weakness which he owns? Your love for him is half pity. You come hot and tired from the day's battle, and this sweet minstrel sings to you. Who could harm the kind vagrant harper? Whom did he ever hurt? He carries no weapon — save the harp on which he plays to you; and with which he delights great and humble, young and old, the captains in the tents, or the soldiers round the fire, or the women and children in the villages, at whose porches he stops and sings his simple songs of love and beauty. With that sweet story of the Vicar of Wakefield, he has found entry into every castle and every hamlet in Europe. . . . Think of him, reckless, thriftless, vain, if you like — but merciful, gentle, generous, full of love and pity. He passes out of our life, and goes to render his account beyond it. Think of the poor pensioners weeping at his grave; think of the noble spirits that admired and deplored him; think of the righteous pen that wrote his epitaph — and of the wonderful and unanimous response of affection with which the world has paid back the love he gave it. His humor delights us still: his song fresh and beautiful as when first he charmed with it: his words in all our mouths: his very weaknesses beloved and familiar — his benevolent spirit still to smile upon us: to do gentle kindnesses: to succor with sweet charity: to soothe, caress, and forgive: to plead with the fortunate for the unhappy and poor!

---

[BY WILLIAM BLACK, IN English Men of Letters SERIES.]

THE Vicar of Wakefield, considered structurally, follows the lines of the Book of Job. You take a good man, overwhelm him with successive misfortunes, show the pure flame of his soul burning in the midst of the darkness, and then, as the reward of his patience and fortitude and submission, restore him gradually to happiness, with even larger flocks and herds than before. The machinery by which all this is brought about is, in the Vicar of Wakefield, the weak part of the story. The plot is full of wild improbabilities; in fact, the expedients by which all the members of the family are brought together and made happy at the same time, are nothing short of desperate. It is quite clear, too, that the author does not know what to make of the episode of Olivia and her husband; they are allowed to drop through; we leave him playing the French horn at a relation's house, while she, in her father's home, is supposed to be unnoticed, so much are they all taken up with the rejoicings over the double wedding. It is very probable that when Goldsmith began the story he had no very definite plot concocted; and that it was only when the much-persecuted Vicar had to be restored to happiness that he found the entanglements surrounding him, and had to make frantic efforts to break through them. But, be that as it may, it is not for the plot that people now read the Vicar of Wakefield; it is not the intricacies of the story that have made it the delight of the world. Surely human nature must be very much the same when this simple description of a quiet English home went straight to the heart of nations in both hemispheres.

And the wonder is that Goldsmith, of all men, should have produced such a perfect picture of domestic life. What had his own life been but a moving about between garret and tavern, between bachelor's lodgings and clubs? Where had he seen — unless, indeed, he looked back through the mist of years to the scenes of his childhood — all this gentle government and wise blindness; all this affection, and consideration, and respect? There is as much human nature in the character of the Vicar alone as would have furnished any fifty of the novels of that day or of this. Who has not been charmed by his sly and quaint humor, by his moral dignity and simple vanities, even by the little secrets he reveals to us of his paternal rule!

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION.

---

THERE are a hundred faults in this thing, and a hundred things might be said to prove them beauties. But it is needless. A book may be amusing with numerous errors, or it may be dull without a single absurdity. The hero of this piece unites in himself the three greatest characters upon earth: he is a priest, a husbandman, and the father of a family. He is drawn as ready to teach, and ready to obey; as simple in affluence, and majestic in adversity. In this age of opulence and refinement, whom can such a character please? Such as are fond of high life, will turn with disdain from the simplicity of his country fireside. Such as mistake ribaldry for humor, will find no wit in his harmless conversation; and such as have been taught to deride religion, will laugh at one whose chief stores of comfort are drawn from futurity.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

---

CHAPTER I.

THE DESCRIPTION OF THE FAMILY OF WAKEFIELD, IN WHICH A KINDRED LIKENESS PREVAILS, AS WELL OF MINDS AS OF PERSONS.

I WAS ever of opinion that the honest man who married and brought up a large family did more service than he who continued single and only talked of population. From this motive, I had scarcely taken orders a year before I began to think seriously of matrimony, 5 and chose my wife as she did her wedding-gown, not for a fine, glossy surface, but for such qualities as would wear well. To do her justice, she was a good-natured, notable woman; and as for breeding, there were few country ladies who could show more. She could read 10 any English book without much spelling; but for pickling, preserving, and cookery, none could excel her. She prided herself also upon being an excellent contriver in housekeeping; though I could never find that we grew richer with all her contrivances. 15

However, we loved each other tenderly, and our fondness increased as we grew old. There was, in fact, nothing that could make us angry with the world or each other. We had an elegant house, situated in a fine country and a good neighborhood. The year was 5 spent in moral or rural amusements, in visiting our rich neighbors, and relieving such as were poor. We had no revolutions to fear, nor fatigues to undergo; all our adventures were by the fireside, and all our migrations from the blue bed to the brown.

10 As we lived near the road, we often had the traveller or stranger visit us to taste our gooseberry-wine, for which we had great reputation; and I profess, with the veracity of an historian, that I never knew one of them find fault with it. Our cousins, too, even to the fortieth
15 remove, all remembered their affinity, without any help from the herald's office, and came very frequently to see us. Some of them did us no great honor by these claims of kindred; as we had the blind, the maimed, and the halt amongst the number. However, my wife
20 always insisted that as they were the same flesh and blood they should sit with us at the same table. So that if we had not very rich, we generally had very happy friends about us; for this remark will hold good through life, that the poorer the guest, the better pleased 25 he ever is with being treated: and as some men gaze with admiration at the colors of a tulip, or the wings of a butterfly, so I was by nature an admirer of happy human faces. However, when any one of our relations was found to be a person of very bad character, a troublesome guest, or one we desired to get rid of, upon his leaving my house I ever took care to lend him a riding-coat, or a pair of boots, or sometimes a horse of small value, and I always had the satisfaction of finding he never came back to return them. By this the house was cleared of such as we did not like; but never was the family of Wakefield known to turn the traveller or the poor dependent out of doors.

Thus we lived several years in a state of much happiness; not but that we sometimes had those little rubs which Providence sends to enhance the value of its favors. My orchard was often robbed by schoolboys, and my wife's custards plundered by the cats or the children. The Squire would sometimes fall asleep in the most pathetic parts of my sermon, or his lady return my wife's civilities at church with a mutilated courtesy. But we soon got over the uneasiness caused by such accidents, and usually in three or four days began to wonder how they vexed us.

My children, the offspring of temperance, as they were educated without softness, so they were at once well formed and healthy; my sons hardy and active, my daughters beautiful and blooming. When I stood in the midst of the little circle, which promised to be the support of my declining age, I could not avoid repeating the famous story of Count Abensberg, who, in Henry II.'s progress through Germany, while other courtiers came with their treasures, brought his thirty-two children, and presented them to his sovereign as the most valuable offering he had to bestow. In this manner, though I had but six, I considered them as a very valuable present made to my country, and consequently looked upon it as my debtor. Our eldest son was named 5 George, after his uncle, who left us ten thousand pounds. Our second child, a girl, I intended to call after her Aunt Grissel; but my wife, who had been reading romances, insisted upon her being called Olivia. In less than another year we had another daughter, and now I

10 was determined that Grissel should be her name; but a rich relation taking a fancy to stand godmother, the girl was by her directions called Sophia; so that we had two romantic names in the family; but I solemnly protest I had no hand in it. Moses was our next, and after an 15 interval of twelve years we had two sons more.

It would be fruitless to deny my exultation when I saw my little ones about me; but the vanity and the satisfaction of my wife were even greater than mine. When our visitors would say, "Well, upon my word, 20 Mrs. Primrose, you have the finest children in the whole country:" "Ay, neighbor," she would answer, "they are as heaven made them, handsome enough, if they be good enough; for handsome is that handsome does." And then she would bid the girls hold up their heads;
25 who, to conceal nothing, were certainly very handsome. Mere outside is so very trifling a circumstance with me, that I should scarcely have remembered to mention it had it not been a general topic of conversation in the country. Olivia, now about eighteen, had that luxuri-ancy of beauty with which painters generally draw Hebe; open, sprightly, and commanding. Sophia's features were not so striking at first, but often did more certain execution; for they were soft, modest, and alluring. The one vanquished by a single blow, the other by efforts successively repeated. 5

The temper of a woman is generally formed from the turn of her features; at least it was so with my daughters. Olivia wished for many lovers, Sophia to secure one. Olivia was often affected from too great a desire 10 to please. Sophia even repressed excellence, from her fears to offend. The one entertained me with her vivacity when I was gay, the other with her sense when I was serious. But these qualities were never carried to excess in either, and I have often seen them exchange 15 characters for a whole day together. A suit of mourning has transformed my coquette into a prude, and a new set of ribbons has given her younger sister more than natural vivacity. My eldest son George was bred at Oxford, as I intended him for one of the learned professions. My second boy Moses, whom I designed for 20 business, received a sort of miscellaneous education at home. But it is needless to attempt describing the particular characters of young people that had seen but very little of the world. In short, a family likeness prevailed through all, and, properly speaking, they had but 25 one character, that of being all equally generous, credulous, simple, and inoffensive.

CHAPTER II.

FAMILY MISFORTUNES. — THE LOSS OF FORTUNE ONLY SERVES TO INCREASE THE PRIDE OF THE WORTHY.

THE temporal concerns of our family were chiefly committed to my wife's management; as to the spiritual, I took them entirely under my own direction. The profits of my living, which amounted to but thirty-five pounds a year, I made over to the orphans and widows of the clergy of our diocese; for having sufficient fortune of my own, I was careless of temporalities, and felt a secret pleasure in doing my duty without reward. I also set a resolution of keeping no
10 curate, and of being acquainted with every man in the parish, exhorting the married men to temperance, and the bachelors to matrimony; so that in a few years it was a common saying that there were three strange wants at Wakefield, — a parson wanting pride, young 15 men wanting wives, and ale-houses wanting customers.

Matrimony was always one of my favorite topics, and I wrote several sermons to prove its happiness: but there was a peculiar tenet which I made a point of supporting; for I maintained with Whiston, that it was 20 unlawful for a priest of the Church of England, after the death of his first wife, to take a second, or, to express it in one word, I valued myself upon being a strict monogamist.

I was early initiated into this important dispute on which so many laborious volumes have been written. I published some tracts upon the subject myself, which, 5 as they never sold, I have the consolation of thinking are read only by the happy few. Some of my friends called this my weak side; but, alas! they had not, like me, made it the subject of long contemplation. The more I reflected upon it, the more important it appeared. I even went a step beyond Whiston in displaying my principles. As he had engraven upon his wife's tomb that she was the only wife of William Whiston, so I wrote a similar epitaph for my wife, though still living, in which I extolled her prudence, 15 economy, and obedience till death; and having got it copied fair, with an elegant frame, it was placed over the chimney-piece, where it answered several very useful purposes. It admonished my wife of her duty to me, and my fidelity to her; it inspired her with a pas- 20 sion for fame, and constantly put her in mind of her end.

It was thus, perhaps, from hearing marriage so often recommended, that my eldest son, just upon leaving college, fixed his affections upon the daughter of a neighboring clergyman, who was a dignitary in the 25 church, and in circumstances to give her a large fortune. But fortune was her smallest accomplishment. Miss Arabella Wilmot was allowed by all (except my two daughters) to be completely pretty. Her youth, health, and innocence were still heightened by a complexion so transparent, and such a happy sensibility of look, as even age could not gaze on with indifference. As Mr. Wilmot knew that I could make a very handsome settlement on my son, he was not averse to the match; so both families lived together in all that harmony which generally precedes an expected alliance. Being convinced by experience that the days of courtship are the most happy of our lives, I was willing enough to lengthen the period; and the various amusements which the young couple every day shared in each other's company, seemed to increase their passion. We were generally awakened in the morning by music, and on fine days rode a-hunting. The hours between breakfast and dinner the ladies devoted to dress and study; they usually read a page, and gazed at themselves in the glass, which even philosophers might own often presented the page of greatest beauty. At dinner my wife took the lead; for as she always insisted upon carving everything herself, it being her mother's way, she gave us upon these occasions the history of every dish. When we had dined, to prevent the ladies leaving us, I generally ordered the table to be removed; and sometimes, with the music-master's assistance, the girls would give us a very agreeable concert. Walking out, drinking tea, country dances, and forfeits shortened the rest of the day without the assistance of cards, as I hated all manner of gaming, except backgammon, at which my old friend and I sometimes took a two-penny hit. Nor can I here pass over an ominous circumstance that happened the last time we played together ; I only wanted to fling a quatre, and yet I threw deuce ace five times running.

Some months were elapsed in this manner, till at last 5 it was thought convenient to fix a day for the nuptials of the young couple, who seemed earnestly to desire it. During the preparations for the wedding, I need not describe the busy importance of my wife, nor the sly looks of my daughters ; in fact, my attention was fixed 10 on another object, the completing a tract which I intended shortly to publish in defence of my favorite principle. As I looked upon this as a masterpiece, both for argument and style, I could not in the pride of my heart avoid showing it to my old friend Mr. Wilmot, as 15 I made no doubt of receiving his approbation ; but not till too late I discovered that he was most violently attached to the contrary opinion, and with good reason, for he was at that time actually courting a fourth wife. This, as may be expected, produced a dispute attended 20 with some acrimony, which threatened to interrupt our intended alliance ; but on the day before that appointed for the ceremony, we agreed to discuss the subject at large.

It was managed with proper spirit on both sides ; he asserted that I was heterodox, I retorted the charge, 25 he replied, and I rejoined. In the meantime, while the controversy was hottest, I was called out by one of my relations, who, with a face of concern, advised me to give up the dispute, at least till my son's wedding was over.

“How,” cried I, “relinquish the cause of truth, and let him be a husband, already driven to the very verge of absurdity. You might as well advise me to give up my fortune as my argument.” — “Your fortune,” returned
5 my friend, “I am now sorry to inform you, is almost nothing. The merchant in town in whose hands your money was lodged, has gone off, to avoid a statute of bankruptcy, and is thought not to have left a shilling in the pound. I was unwilling to shock you or your family
10 with the account till after the wedding, but now it may serve to moderate your warmth in the argument; for I suppose your own prudence will enforce the necessity of dissembling, at least till your son has the young lady’s fortune secure.” — “Well,” returned I, “if what you tell
15 me be true, and if I am to be a beggar, it shall never make me a rascal, or induce me to disavow my principles. I’ll go this moment and inform the company of my circumstances; and as for the argument, I even here retract my former concessions in the old gentle-
20 man’s favor, nor will I allow him now to be a husband in any sense of the expression.”

It would be endless to describe the different sensations of both families when I divulged the news of our misfortune; but what others felt was slight to what the 25 lovers appeared to endure. Mr. Wilmot, who seemed before sufficiently inclined to break off the match, was by this blow soon determined; one virtue he had in perfection, which was prudence, too often the only one that is left us at seventy-two.

CHAPTER III.

A MIGRATION. — THE FORTUNATE CIRCUMSTANCES OF OUR LIVES ARE GENERALLY FOUND AT LAST TO BE OF OUR OWN PROCURING.

THE only hope of our family now was that the report of our misfortune might be malicious or premature; but a letter from my agent in town soon came with a confirmation of every particular. The loss of fortune to myself alone would have been trifling; the only uneasiness I felt was for my family, who were to be humble without an education to render them callous to contempt.

Near a fortnight had passed before I attempted to restrain their affliction; for premature consolation is but the remembrancer of sorrow. During this interval my thoughts were employed on some future means of supporting them; and at last a small cure of fifteen pounds a year was offered me in a distant neighborhood, where I could still enjoy my principles without molestation. With this proposal I joyfully closed, having determined to increase my salary by managing a little farm.

Having taken this resolution, my next care was to get together the wrecks of my fortune; and, all debts collected and paid, out of fourteen thousand pounds we had but four hundred remaining. My chief attention, therefore, was now to bring down the pride of my family to their circumstances; for I well knew that aspiring beggary is wretchedness itself. "You cannot be ignorant, my children," cried I, "that no prudence of 5 ours could have prevented our late misfortune; but prudence may do much in disappointing its effects. We are now poor, my fondlings, and wisdom bids us conform to our humble situation. Let us, then, without repining, give up those splendors in which numbers are wretched,

10 and seek in humbler circumstances that peace with which all may be happy. The poor live pleasantly without our help, why then should we not learn to live without theirs? No, my children, let us from this moment give up all pretensions to gentility: we have 15 still enough left for happiness, if we are wise; and let us draw upon content for the deficiencies of fortune."

As my eldest son was bred a scholar, I determined to send him to town, where his abilities might contribute to our support and his own. The separation of friends 20 and families is, perhaps, one of the most distressful circumstances attendant on penury. The day soon arrived on which we were to disperse for the first time. My son, after taking leave of his mother and the rest, who mingled their tears with their kisses, came to ask a 25 blessing from me. This I gave him from my heart, and which, added to five guineas, was all the patrimony I had now to bestow. "You are going, my boy," cried I, "to London on foot, in the manner Hooker, your great ancestor, travelled there before you. Take from me the same horse that was given him by the good Bishop Jewel, this staff, and this book too: it will be your comfort on the way; these two lines in it are worth a million, I have been young, and now am old; yet never saw I the righteous man forsaken, or his seed begging 5 their bread. Let this be your consolation as you travel on. Go, my boy: whatever be thy fortune, let me see thee once a year; still keep a good heart, and farewell." As he was possessed of integrity and honor, I was under no apprehensions for throwing him naked into the am- 10 phitheatre of life; for I knew he would act a good part whether vanquished or victorious.

His departure only prepared the way for our own, which arrived a few days afterwards. The leaving a neighborhood in which we had enjoyed so many hours 15 of tranquillity was not without a tear which scarcely fortitude itself could suppress. Besides, a journey of seventy miles to a family that had hitherto never been above ten from home, filled us with apprehension; and the cries of the poor, who followed us for some 20 miles, contributed to increase it. The first day's journey brought us in safety within thirty miles of our future retreat, and we put up for the night at an obscure inn in a village by the way. When we were shown a room I desired the landlord, in my usual way, to let us have 25 his company, with which he complied, as what he drank would increase the bill next morning. He knew, however, the whole neighborhood to which I was removing, particularly Squire Thornhill, who was to be my landlord, and who lived within a few miles of the place. This gentleman he described as one who desired to know little more of the world than its pleasures, being particularly remarkable for his attachment to the fair 5 sex. He observed that no virtue was able to resist his arts and assiduity, and that scarcely a farmer's daughter within ten miles round, but what had found him successful and faithless. Though this account gave me some pain, it had a very different effect upon my daugh-10 ters, whose features seemed to brighten with the expectation of an approaching triumph; nor was my wife less pleased and confident of their allurements and virtue. While our thoughts were thus employed, the hostess entered the room to inform her husband that the strange

15 gentleman, who had been two days in the house, wanted money, and could not satisfy them for his reckoning. "Want money!" replied the host, "that must be impossible; for it was no later than yesterday he paid three guineas to our beadle to spare an old broken soldier
20 that was to be whipped through the town for dog-stealing." The hostess, however, still persisting in her first assertion, he was preparing to leave the room, swearing that he would be satisfied one way or another, when I begged the landlord would introduce me to a stranger 25 of so much charity as he described. With this he complied, showing in a gentleman who seemed about thirty, dressed in clothes that once were laced. His person was well formed, and his face marked with the lines of thinking. He had something short and dry in his address, and seemed not to understand ceremony, or to despise it. Upon the landlord's leaving the room, I could not avoid expressing my concern to the stranger at seeing a gentleman in such circumstances, and offered him my purse to satisfy the present demand. "I take it 5 with all my heart, sir," replied he, "and am glad that a late oversight in giving what money I had about me, has shown me that there are still some men like you. I must, however, previously entreat being informed of the name and residence of my benefactor, in order to 10 repay him as soon as possible." In this I satisfied him fully, not only mentioning my name and late misfortunes, but the place to which I was going to remove. "This," cried he, "happens still more luckily than I hoped for, as I am going the same way myself, having 15 been detained here two days by the floods, which I hope by to-morrow will be found passable." I testified the pleasure I should have in his company; and my wife and daughters joining in entreaty, he was prevailed upon to stay supper. The stranger's conversation, which was at 20 once pleasing and instructive, induced me to wish for a continuance of it; but it was now high time to retire and take refreshment against the fatigues of the following day.

The next morning we all set forward together; my 25 family on horseback, while Mr. Burchell, our new companion, walked along the foot-path by the roadside, observing, with a smile, that as we were ill-mounted, he would be too generous to attempt leaving us behind.

As the floods were not yet subsided, we were obliged to hire a guide, who trotted on before, Mr. Burchell and I bringing up the rear. We lightened the fatigues of the road with philosophical disputes, which he seemed 5 to understand perfectly. But what surprised me most was, that though he was a money-borrower, he defended his opinions with as much obstinacy as if he had been my patron. He now and then also informed me to whom the different seats belonged that lay in our view
10 as we travelled the road. "That," cried he, pointing to a very magnificent house which stood at some distance, "belongs to Mr. Thornhill, a young gentleman who enjoys a large fortune, though entirely dependent on the will of his uncle, Sir William Thornhill, a gen-
15 tleman who, content with a little himself, permits his nephew to enjoy the rest, and chiefly resides in town." — "What!" cried I, "is my young landlord then the nephew of a man whose virtues, generosity, and singularities are so universally known? I have heard Sir
20 William Thornhill represented as one of the most generous yet whimsical men in the kingdom; a man of consummate benevolence." — "Something, perhaps, too much so," replied Mr. Burchell; "at least he carried benevolence to an excess when young; for his passions 25 were then strong, and as they were all upon the side of virtue, they led it up to a romantic extreme. He early began to aim at the qualifications of the soldier and scholar; was soon distinguished in the army, and had some reputation among men of learning. Adulation ever follows the ambitious; for such alone receive most pleasure from flattery. He was surrounded with crowds, who showed him only one side of their character; so that he began to lose a regard for private interest in universal sympathy. He loved all mankind; 5 for fortune prevented him from knowing that there were rascals. Physicians tell us of a disorder in which the whole body is so exquisitely sensible that the slightest touch gives pain; what some have thus suffered in their persons, this gentleman felt in his mind. The 10 slightest distress, whether real or fictitious, touched him to the quick, and his soul labored under a sickly sensibility of the miseries of others. Thus disposed to relieve, it will be easily conjectured he found numbers disposed to solicit; his profusions began to impair 15 his fortune, but not his good-nature (that, indeed, was seen to increase as the other seemed to decay); he grew improvident as he grew poor; and though he talked like a man of sense, his actions were those of a fool. Still, however, being surrounded with importunity, and 20 no longer able to satisfy every request that was made him, instead of money he gave promises. They were all he had to bestow, and he had not resolution enough to give any man pain by a denial. By this he drew round him crowds of dependents, whom he was sure 25 to disappoint, yet wished to relieve. These hung upon him for a time, and left him with merited reproaches and contempt. But in proportion as he became contemptible to others, he became despicable to himself.

His mind had leaned upon their adulation, and that support taken away he could find no pleasure in the applause of his heart, which he had never learnt to reverence. The world now began to wear a different aspect; 5 the flattery of his friends began to dwindle into simple approbation. Approbation soon took the more friendly form of advice, and advice when rejected produced their reproaches. He now therefore found that such friends as benefits had gathered round him were little csti- 10 mable; he now found that a man's own heart must be ever given to gain that of another. I now found that — that — I forgot what I was going to observe; in short, sir, he resolved to respect himself, and laid down a plan of restoring his fallen fortune. For this purpose, 15 in his own whimsical manner, he travelled through Europe on foot; and now, though he has scarcely attained the age of thirty, his circumstances are more affluent than ever. At present, his bounties are more rational and more moderate than before; but still he 20 preserves the character of a humorist, and finds most pleasure in eccentric virtues."

My attention was so much taken up by Mr. Burchell's account, that I scarcely looked forward as we went along, till we were alarmed by the cries of my 25 family, when turning, I perceived my youngest daughter in the midst of a rapid stream, thrown from her horse, and struggling with the torrent. She had sunk twice; nor was it in my power to disengage myself in time to bring her relief. My sensations were even too violent to permit my attempting her rescue ; she must have certainly perished had not my companion, perceiving her danger, instantly plunged in to her relief, and, with some difficulty, brought her safely to the opposite shore. By taking the current a little farther up, the rest of the family got safely over, where we had an opportunity of joining our acknowledgments to hers. Her gratitude may be more readily imagined than described ; she thanked her deliverer more with looks than words, and continued to lean upon his arm, as if still 10 willing to receive assistance. My wife also hoped one day to have the pleasure of returning his kindness at her own house. Thus, after we were refreshed at the next inn, and had dined together, as Mr. Burchell was going to a different part of the country he took leave ; 15 and we pursued our journey, my wife observing as we went, that she liked him extremely, and protesting that, if he had birth and fortune to entitle him to match into such a family as ours, she knew no man she would sooner fix upon. I could not but smile to hear her talk 20 in this lofty strain ; but I was never much displeased with those harmless delusions that tend to make us more happy.

CHAPTER IV.

A PROOF THAT EVEN THE HUMBLEST FORTUNE MAY GRANT HAPPINESS, WHICH DEPENDS NOT ON CIRCUMSTANCES BUT CONSTITUTION.

THE place of our retreat was in a little neighborhood, consisting of farmers, who tilled their own grounds, and were equal strangers to opulence and poverty. As they had almost all the conveniences of life within them-
5 selves, they seldom visited towns or cities in search of superfluity. Remote from the polite, they still retained the primeval simplicity of manners; and frugal by habit, they scarcely knew that temperance was a virtue. They wrought with cheerfulness on days of labor; but ob-
10 served festivals as intervals of idleness and pleasure. They kept up the Christmas carol, sent true love-knots on Valentine morning, eat pancakes on Shrovetide, showed their wit on the first of April, and religiously cracked nuts on Michaelmas eve. Being apprised of 15 our approach, the whole neighborhood came out to meet their minister, dressed in their finest clothes, and preceded by pipe and tabor. A feast was also provided for our reception, at which we sat cheerfully down; and what the conversation wanted in wit, was made up in 20 laughter.

Our little habitation was situated at the foot of a sloping hill, sheltered with beautiful underwood behind and a prattling river before; on one side a meadow, on the other a green. My farm consisted of about twenty acres of excellent land, having given a hundred pounds 5 for my predecessor's good-will. Nothing could exceed the neatness of my little enclosures, the elms and hedge-rows appearing with inexpressible beauty. My house consisted of but one story, and was covered with thatch, which gave it an air of great snugness; the walls 10 on the inside were nicely whitewashed, and my daughters undertook to adorn them with pictures of their own designing. Though the same room served us for parlor and kitchen, that only made it the warmer. Besides, as it was kept with the utmost neatness, the dishes, plates, 15 and coppers being well scoured, and all disposed in bright rows on the shelves, the eye was agreeably relieved, and did not want richer furniture. There were three other apartments, — one for my wife and me, another for our two daughters, within our own, and the 20 third with two beds, for the rest of the children.

The little republic to which I gave laws was regulated in the following manner: by sunrise we all assembled in our common apartment, the fire being previously kindled by the servant. After we had saluted 25 each other with proper ceremony, for I always thought fit to keep up some mechanical forms of good breeding, without which freedom ever destroys friendship, we all bent in gratitude to that Being who gave us another day. This duty being performed, my son and I went to pursue our usual industry abroad, while my wife and daughters employed themselves in providing breakfast, which was always ready at a certain time. I allowed 5 half an hour for this meal, and an hour for dinner; which time was taken up in innocent mirth between my wife and daughters, and in philosophical arguments between my son and me.

As we rose with the sun, so we never pursued our 10 labors after it was gone down, but returned home to the expecting family, where smiling looks, a neat hearth, and pleasant fire were prepared for our reception. Nor were we without guests: sometimes Farmer Flamborough, our talkative neighbor, and often the blind pi-15 per, would pay us a visit, and taste our gooseberry wine; for the making of which we had lost neither the receipt nor the reputation. These harmless people had several ways of being good company; while one played, the other would sing some soothing ballad, Johnny Arm-
20 strong's last good-night, or the cruelty of Barbara Allen. The night was concluded in the manner we began the morning, my youngest boys being appointed to read the lessons of the day; and he that read loudest, distinctest, and best, was to have a half-penny on Sunday to put in 25 the poor's box.

When Sunday came, it was indeed a day of finery, which all my sumptuary edicts could not restrain. How well soever I fancied my lectures against pride had conquered the vanity of my daughters, yet I found them still secretly attached to all their former finery: they still loved laces, ribands, bugles, and catgut; my wife herself retained a passion for her crimson paduasoy, because I formerly happened to say it became her.

The first Sunday in particular their behavior served 5 to mortify me. I had desired my girls the preceding night to be drest early the next day; for I always loved to be at church a good while before the rest of the congregation. They punctually obeyed my directions; but when we were to assemble in the morning at breakfast, 10 down came my wife and daughters drest out in all their former splendor: their hair plastered up with pomatum, their faces patched to taste, their trains bundled up in a heap behind, and rustling at every motion. I could not help smiling at their vanity, particularly that of my wife, from whom I expected more 15 discretion. In this exigence, therefore, my only resource was to order my son, with an important air, to call our coach. The girls were amazed at the command; but I repeated it with more solemnity than before. "Surely, 20 my dear, you jest," cried my wife; "we can walk it perfectly well; we want no coach to carry us now." — "You mistake, child," returned I, "we do want a coach; for if we walk to church in this trim, the very children in the parish will hoot after us." — "Indeed," replied my 25 wife, "I always imagined that my Charles was fond of seeing his children neat and handsome about him." — "You may be as neat as you please," interrupted I, "and I shall love you the better for it; but all this is not neatness, but frippery. These ruffings and pinkings and patchings will only make us hated by all the wives of all our neighbors. No, my children," continued I more gravely, "those gowns may be altered into something of a plainer cut; for finery is very unbecoming in 5 us, who want the means of decency. I do not know whether such flouncing and shredding is becoming even in the rich, if we consider, upon a moderate calculation, that the nakedness of the indigent world might be 10 clothed from the trimmings of the vain."

This remonstrance had a proper effect: they went with great composure, that very instant, to change their dress; and the next day I had the satisfaction of finding my daughters, at their own request, employed in 15 cutting up their trains into Sunday waistcoats for Dick and Bill, the two little ones, and, what was still more satisfactory, the gowns seemed improved by this curtailing.

CHAPTER V.

A NEW AND GREAT ACQUAINTANCE INTRODUCED. — WHAT WE PLACE MOST HOPES UPON GENERALLY PROVES MOST FATAL.

AT a small distance from the house, my predecessor had made a seat, overshadowed by a hedge of hawthorn and honeysuckle. Here, when the weather was fine and our labor soon finished, we usually sat together, to enjoy an extensive landscape in the calm of the evening. 5 Here too we drank tea, which was now become an occasional banquet; and as we had it but seldom, it diffused a new joy, the preparations for it being made with no small share of bustle and ceremony. On these occasions our two little ones always read to us, and they 10 were regularly served after we had done. Sometimes, to give a variety to our amusements, the girls sung to the guitar; and while they thus formed a little concert, my wife and I would stroll down the sloping field, that was embellished with bluebells and centaury, talk of 15 our children with rapture, and enjoy the breeze that wafted both health and harmony.

In this manner we began to find that every situation in life might bring its own peculiar pleasures: every morning awaked us to a repetition of toil; but the even- 20 ing repaid it with vacant hilarity.

It was about the beginning of the autumn, on a holiday, for I kept such as intervals of relaxation from labor, that I had drawn out my family to our usual place of amusement, and our young musicians began their usual concert. As we were thus engaged, we saw a stag bound nimbly by, within about twenty paces of where we were sitting, and by its panting it seemed pressed by the hunters. We had not much time to reflect upon the poor animal's distress, when we perceived the dogs and horsemen come sweeping along at some distance behind, and making the very path it had taken. I was instantly for returning in with my family; but either curiosity or surprise, or some more hidden motive, held my wife and daughters to their seats. The huntsman, who rode foremost, passed us with great swiftness, followed by four or five persons more, who seemed in equal haste. At last a young gentleman of a more genteel appearance than the rest came forward, and for a while regarding us, instead of pursuing the chase, stopt short, and giving his horse to a servant who attended, approached us with a careless, superior air. He seemed to want no introduction, but was going to salute my daughters, as one certain of a kind reception; but they had early learnt the lesson of looking presumption out of countenance. Upon which he let us know his name was Thornhill, and that he was the owner of the estate that lay for some extent round us. He again therefore offered to salute the female part of the family; and such was the power of fortune and fine clothes, that he found no second repulse.

As his address, though confident, was easy, we soon became more familiar ; and perceiving musical instruments lying near, he begged to be favored with a song. As I did not approve of such disproportioned acquaintance, I winked upon my daughters in order to prevent their compliance : but my hint was counteracted by one from their mother ; so that, with a cheerful air, they gave us a favorite song of Dryden's. Mr. Thornhill seemed highly delighted with their performance and choice, and then took up the guitar himself. He played but very 10 indifferently ; however, my eldest daughter repaid his former applause with interest, and assured him that his tones were louder than even those of her master. At this compliment he bowed, which she returned with a courtesy. He praised her taste, and she commended his 15 understanding ; an age could not have made them better acquainted : while the fond mother, too, equally happy, insisted upon her landlord's stepping in, and tasting a glass of gooseberry. The whole family seemed earnest to please him : my girls attempted to entertain him 20 with topics they thought most modern ; while Moses, on the contrary, gave him a question or two from the ancients, for which he had the satisfaction of being laughed at ; my little ones were no less busy, and fondly stuck close to the stranger. All my endeavors could scarcely 25 keep their fingers from handling and tarnishing the lace on his clothes, and lifting up the flaps of his pocket-holes, to see what was there. At the approach of evening he took leave ; but not till he had requested permission to renew his visit, which, as he was our landlord, we most readily agreed to.

As soon as he was gone my wife called a council on the conduct of the day. She was of opinion that it
5 was a most fortunate hit; for that she had known even stranger things at last brought to bear. She hoped again to see the day in which we might hold up our heads with the best of them; and concluded, she protested she could see no reason why the two Miss
10 Wrinkles should marry great fortunes, and her children get none. As this last argument was directed to me, I protested I could see no reason for it either, nor why Mr. Simkins got the ten thousand pound prize in the lottery, and we sat down with a blank. "I protest, 15 Charles," cried my wife, "this is the way you always damp my girls and me when we are in spirits. Tell me, Sophy, my dear, what do you think of our new visitor? Don't you think he seemed to be good-natured?" — "Immensely so, indeed, mamma," replied 20 she. "I think he has a great deal to say upon everything, and is never at a loss; and the more trifling the subject, the more he has to say." — "Yes," cried Olivia, "he is well enough for a man; but for my own part, I don't much like him, he is so extremely impudent and 25 familiar; but on the guitar he is shocking." These two last speeches I interpreted by contraries. I found by this that Sophia internally despised as much as Olivia secretly admired him. "Whatever may be your opinions of him, my children," cried I, "to confess the truth, he has not prepossessed me in his favor. Disproportioned friendships ever terminate in disgust; and I thought, notwithstanding all his ease, that he seemed perfectly sensible of the distance between us. Let us keep to companions of our own rank. There is 5 no character more contemptible than a man that is a fortune-hunter; and I can see no reason why fortune-hunting women should not be contemptible too. Thus, at best, we shall be contemptible if his views be honorable; but if they be otherwise! I should shudder but 10 to think of that. It is true I have no apprehensions from the conduct of my children, but I think there are some from his character." I would have proceeded, but for the interruption of a servant from the Squire, who, with his compliments, sent us a side of venison and a 15 promise to dine with us some days after. This well-timed present pleaded more powerfully in his favor than anything I had to say could obviate. I therefore continued silent, satisfied with just having pointed out danger, and leaving it to their own discretion to avoid 20 it. That virtue which requires to be ever guarded is scarcely worth the sentinel.

CHAPTER VI.

THE HAPPINESS OF A COUNTRY FIRESIDE.

As we carried on the former dispute with some degree of warmth, in order to accommodate matters, it was universally agreed that we should have a part of the venison for supper; and the girls undertook the task with 5 alacrity. "I am sorry," cried I, "that we have no neighbor or stranger to take a part in this good cheer; feasts of this kind acquire a double relish from hospitality." — "Bless me!" cried my wife, "here comes our good friend Mr. Burchell, that saved our Sophia, and 10 that ran you down fairly in the argument." — "Confute me in argument, child!" cried I. "You mistake there, my dear; I believe there are but few that can do that. I never dispute your abilities at making a goose-pie, and I beg you'll leave argument to me." As I spoke, poor 15 Mr. Burchell entered the house, and was welcomed by the family, who shook him heartily by the hand, while little Dick officiously reached him a chair.

I was pleased with the poor man's friendship for two reasons; because I knew that he wanted mine, and I 20 knew him to be friendly as far as he was able. He was known in our neighborhood by the character of the poor Gentleman that would do no good when he was young, though he was not yet thirty. He would at intervals talk with great good sense ; but in general he was fondest of the company of children, whom he used to call harmless little men. He was famous, I found, for singing them ballads, and telling them stories ; and seldom 5 went out without something in his pockets for them, — a piece of gingerbread, or a halfpenny whistle. He generally came for a few days into our neighborhood once a year, and lived upon the neighbors' hospitality. He sat down to supper among us, and my wife was not sparing 10 of her gooseberry wine. The tale went round ; he sung us old songs, and gave the children the story of the Buck of Beverland, with the history of Patient Grissel, the adventures of Catskin, and then Fair Rosamond's Bower. Our cock, which always crew at eleven, now told us it 15 was time for repose ; but an unforeseen difficulty started about lodging the stranger, — all our beds were already taken up, and it was too late to send him to the next ale-house. In this dilemma, little Dick offered him his part of the bed, if his brother Moses would let him lie 20 with him. " And I," cried Bill, " will give Mr. Burchell my part, if my sisters will take me to theirs." — " Well done, my good children !" cried I ; " hospitality is one of the first Christian duties. The beast retires to his shelter, and the bird flies to its nest ; but helpless man 25 can only find refuge from his fellow-creature. The greatest stranger in this world was He that came to save it. He never had a house, as if willing to see what hospitality was left remaining amongst us. Deborah, my dear," cried I to my wife, "give those boys a lump of sugar each, and let Dick's be the largest, because he spoke first."

In the morning early I called out my whole family to 5 help at saving an after-growth of hay, and our guest offering his assistance, he was accepted among the number. Our labors went on lightly; we turned the swath to the wind. I went foremost, and the rest followed in due succession. I could not avoid, however, observing
10 the assiduity of Mr. Burchell in assisting my daughter Sophia in her part of the task. When he had finished his own, he would join in hers, and enter into a close conversation; but I had too good an opinion of Sophia's understanding, and was too well convinced of her am-
15 bition, to be under any uneasiness from a man of broken fortune. When we were finished for the day, Mr. Burchell was invited as on the night before; but he refused, as he was to lie that night at a neighbor's, to whose child he was carrying a whistle. When gone, our con-
20 versation at supper turned upon our late unfortunate guest. "What a strong instance," said I, "is that poor man of the miseries attending a youth of levity and extravagance! He by no means wants sense, which only serves to aggravate his former folly. Poor forlorn 25 creature, where are now the revellers, the flatterers, that he could once inspire and command? Gone, perhaps, to attend the bagnio pander, grown rich by his extravagance. They once praised him, and now they applaud the pander; their former raptures at his wit are now converted into sarcasms at his folly. He is poor, and perhaps deserves poverty; for he has neither the ambition to be independent, nor the skill to be useful." Prompted, perhaps, by some secret reasons, I delivered this observation with too much acrimony, which my 5 Sophia gently reprov'd: "Whatsoever his former conduct may have been, papa, his circumstances should exempt him from censure now. His present indigence is a sufficient punishment for former folly; and I have heard my papa himself say that we should never strike 10 one unnecessary blow at a victim over whom Providence holds the scourge of its resentment." — "You are right, Sophy," cried my son Moses; "and one of the ancients finely represents so malicious a conduct by the attempts of a rustic to flay Marsyas, whose skin, the fable tells 15 us, had been wholly stript off by another. Besides, I don't know if this poor man's situation be so bad as my father would represent it. We are not to judge of the feelings of others by what we might feel if in their place. However dark the habitation of the mole to our 20 eyes, yet the animal itself finds the apartment sufficiently lightsome. And to confess the truth, this man's mind seems fitted to his station; for I never heard any one more sprightly than he was to-day when he conversed with you." This was said without the least 25 design; however, it excited a blush, which she strove to cover by an affected laugh, assuring him that she scarcely took any notice of what he said to her; but that she believed he might once have been a very fine gentleman. The readiness with which she undertook to vindicate herself, and her blushing, were symptoms I did not internally approve; but I repressed my suspicions.

As we expected our landlord the next day, my wife
5 went to make the venison pasty. Moses sat reading, while I taught the little ones. My daughters seemed equally busy with the rest; and I observed them for a good while cooking something over the fire. I at first supposed they were assisting their mother; but little
10 Dick informed me in a whisper that they were making a wash for the face. Washes of all kinds I had a natural antipathy to; for I knew that instead of mending the complexion, they spoiled it. I therefore approached my chair by sly degrees to the fire, and grasping the poker 15 as if it wanted mending, seemingly by accident overturned the whole composition; and it was too late to begin another.

CHAPTER VII.

A TOWN WIT DESCRIBED. — THE DULLEST FELLOWS MAY LEARN TO BE COMICAL FOR A NIGHT OR TWO.

WHEN the morning arrived on which we were to entertain our young landlord, it may be easily supposed what provisions were exhausted to make an appearance. It may also be conjectured that my wife and daughters expanded their gayest plumage upon this occasion. Mr. Thornhill came with a couple of friends, his chaplain and feeder. The servants, who were numerous, he politely ordered to the next ale-house; but my wife, in the triumph of her heart, insisted on entertaining them all, — for which, by the by, our family was pinched for three weeks after. As Mr. Burchell had hinted to us the day before, that he was making some proposals of marriage to Miss Wilmot, my son George's former mistress, this a good deal damped the heartiness of his reception: but accident in some measure relieved our embarrassment; for one of the company happening to mention her name, Mr. Thornhill observed with an oath that he never knew anything more absurd than calling such a fright a beauty. "For strike me ugly," continued he, "if I should not find as much pleasure in choosing my mistress by the information of a lamp under the clock at St. Dunstan's." At this he laughed, and so did we; the jests of the rich are ever successful. Olivia, too, could not avoid whispering loud enough to be heard, that he had an infinite 5 fund of humor.

After dinner I began with my usual toast, the Church; for this I was thanked by the chaplain, as he said the Church was the only mistress of his affections. "Come, tell us honestly, Frank," said the 10 Squire, with his usual archness, "suppose the Church, your present mistress, drest in lawn sleeves, on one hand, and Miss Sophia, with no lawn about her, on the other, which would you be for?" — "For both, to be sure," cried the chaplain. "Right, Frank," cried the 15 Squire; "for may this glass suffocate me but a fine girl is worth all the priestcraft in the creation. For what are tithes and tricks but an imposition, all a confounded imposture? and I can prove it." — "I wish you would," cried my son Moses; "and I think," continued he,
20 "that I should be able to answer you." — "Very well, sir," cried the Squire, who immediately smoked him, and winking on the rest of the company to prepare us for some sport, "if you are for a cool argument upon that subject, I am ready to accept the challenge. And 25 first, whether you are for managing it analogically or dialogically?" — "I am for managing it rationally," cried Moses, quite happy at being permitted to dispute. "Good again," cried the Squire; "and firstly, of the first: I hope you'll not deny that whatever is, is. If you don't grant me that I can go no further." — "Why," returned Moses, "I think I may grant that, and make the best of it." — "I hope, too," returned the other, "you'll grant that a part is less than the whole." — "I grant that, too," cried Moses; "it is but just and reasonable." — 5

"I hope," cried the Squire, "you will not deny that the two angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones." — "Nothing can be plainer," returned the other, and looked round with his usual importance. "Very well," cried the Squire, speaking very quick, "the premises 10 being thus settled, I proceed to observe, that the concatenation of self-existence, proceeding in a reciprocal duplicate ratio, naturally produces a problematical dialogism, which in some measure proves that the essence of spirituality may be referred to the second predicable." 15 — "Hold, hold!" cried the other; "I deny that. Do you think I can thus tamely submit to such heterodox doctrines?" — "What!" replied the Squire, as if in a passion, "not submit! Answer me one plain question: Do you think Aristotle right when he says that rela- 20 tives are related?" — "Undoubtedly," replied the other. "If so, then," cried the Squire, "answer me directly to what I propose: Whether do you judge the analytical investigation of the first part of my enthymem deficient secundum quoad, or quoad minus, and give me your 25 reasons; give me your reasons, I say, directly." — "I protest," cried Moses, "I don't rightly comprehend the force of your reasoning; but if it be reduced to one simple proposition, I fancy it may then have an answer." — "O sir," cried the Squire, "I am your most humble servant; I find you want me to furnish you with argument and intellects too. No, sir, there I protest you are too hard for me." This effectually raised 5 the laugh against poor Moses, who sat the only dismal figure in a group of merry faces; nor did he offer a single syllable more during the whole entertainment.

But though all this gave me no pleasure, it had a very different effect upon Olivia, who mistook it for humor, 10 though but a mere act of the memory. She thought him therefore a very fine gentleman; and such as consider what powerful ingredients a good figure, fine clothes, and fortune are in that character, will easily forgive her. Mr. Thornhill, notwithstanding his real ignorance, 15 talked with ease, and could expatiate upon the common topics of conversation with fluency. It is not surprising, then, that such talents should win the affections of a girl who by education was taught to value an appearance in herself, and consequently to set a value upon it 20 in another.

Upon his departure, we again entered into a debate upon the merits of our young landlord. As he directed his looks and conversation to Olivia, it was no longer doubted but that she was the object that induced him to 25 be our visitor. Nor did she seem to be much displeased at the innocent raillery of her brother and sister upon this occasion. Even Deborah herself seemed to share the glory of the day, and exulted in her daughter's victory as if it were her own. "And now, my dear," cried she to me, "I'll fairly own that it was I that instructed my girls to encourage our landlord's addresses. I had always some ambition, and you now see that I was right; for who knows how this may end?" — "Ay, who knows that indeed!" answered I with a groan. "For 5 my part, I don't much like it, and I could have been better pleased with one that was poor and honest, than this fine gentleman with his fortune and infidelity; for, depend on 't, if he be what I suspect him, no free thinker shall ever have a child of mine." 10

"Sure, father," cried Moses, "you are too severe in this; for Heaven will never arraign him for what he thinks, but for what he does. Every man has a thousand vicious thoughts, which arise without his power to suppress. Thinking freely of religion may be invol- 15 untary with this gentleman; so that, allowing his sentiments to be wrong, yet as he is purely passive in his assent, he is no more to be blamed for his errors than the governor of a city without walls for the shelter he is obliged to afford an invading enemy." 20

"True, my son," cried I; "but if the governor invites the enemy there, he is justly culpable. And such is always the case with those who embrace error. The vice does not lie in assenting to the proofs they see, but in being blind to many of the proofs that offer. So that, 25 though our erroneous opinions be involuntary when formed, yet as we have been wilfully corrupt, or very negligent in forming them, we deserve punishment for our vice, or contempt for our folly."

My wife now kept up the conversation, though not the argument. She observed that several very prudent men of our acquaintance were free-thinkers, and made very good husbands; and she knew some sensible girls
5 that had skill enough to make converts of their spouses. "And who knows, my dear," continued she, "what Olivia may be able to do. The girl has a great deal to say upon every subject, and to my knowledge is very well skilled in controversy."

10 "Why, my dear, what controversy can she have read?" cried I. "It does not occur to me that I ever put such books into her hand; you certainly overrate her merit." — "Indeed, papa," replied Olivia, "she does not; I have read a great deal of controversy. I have 15 read the disputes between Thwackum and Square; the controversy between Robinson Crusoe and Friday the savage, and am now employed in reading the controversy in 'Religious Courtship.'" — "Very well," cried I, "that's a good girl, I find you are perfectly qualified 20 for making converts; and so help your mother to make the gooseberry-pie."

CHAPTER VIII.

AN AMOUR WHICH PROMISES LITTLE GOOD FORTUNE, YET MAY BE PRODUCTIVE OF MUCH.

THE next morning we were again visited by Mr. Burchell, though I began, for certain reasons, to be displeased with the frequency of his return; but I could not refuse him my company and my fireside. It is true, his labor more than requited his entertainment; for he wrought among us with vigor, and either in the meadow or at the hay-rick put himself foremost. Besides, he had always something amusing to say that lessened our toil, and was at once so out of the way, and yet so sensible, that I loved, laughed at, and pitied him. My only dislike arose from an attachment he discovered to my daughter; he would, in a jesting manner, call her his little mistress, and when he bought each of the girls a set of ribbons, hers was the finest. I knew not how, but he every day seemed to become more amiable, his wit to improve, and his simplicity to assume the superior airs of wisdom.

Our family dined in the field, and we sat, or rather reclined, round a temperate repast, our cloth spread upon the hay, while Mr. Burchell gave cheerfulness to the feast. To heighten our satisfaction, two blackbirds answered each other from opposite hedges, the familiar redbreast came and pecked the crumbs from our hands, and every sound seemed but the echo of tranquillity. "I never sit thus," says Sophia, "but I think of the two 5 lovers so sweetly described by Mr. Gay, who were struck dead in each other's arms. There is something so pathetic in the description that I have read it a hundred times with new rapture." — "In my opinion," cried my son, "the finest strokes in that description are much be-

10 low those in the Acis and Galatea of Ovid. The Roman poet understands the use of contrast better; and upon that figure, artfully managed, all strength in the pathetic depends." — "It is remarkable," cried Mr. Burchell, "that both the poets you mention have equally contrib-
15 uted to introduce a false taste into their respective countries, by loading all their lines with epithet. Men of little genius found them most easily imitated in their defects, and English poetry, like that in the latter empire of Rome, is nothing at present but a combination of 20 luxuriant images, without plot or connection; a string of epithets that improve the sound, without carrying on the sense. But perhaps, madam, while I thus reprehend others, you'll think it just that I should give them an opportunity to retaliate, and indeed I have made the 25 remark only to have an opportunity of introducing to the company a ballad which, whatever be its other defects, is, I think, at least free from those I have mentioned."

A BALLAD.

“TURN, gentle Hermit of the dale,
And guide my lonely way,
To where yon taper cheers the vale
With hospitable ray.

“For here forlorn and lost I tread, 5
With fainting steps and slow;
Where wilds, immeasurably spread,
Seem lengthening as I go.”

“Forbear, my son,” the Hermit cries, 10
“To tempt the dangerous gloom;
For yonder faithless phantom flies
To lure thee to thy doom.

“Here to the houseless child of want
My door is open still;
And though my portion is but scant, 15
I give it with good will.

“Then turn to-night, and freely share
Whate'er my cell bestows;
My rushy couch and frugal fare,
My blessing and repose. 20

“No flocks that range the valley free
To slaughter I condemn;
Taught by that power that pities me,
I learn to pity them :

“But from the mountain's grassy side, 25
A guiltless feast I bring ;
A scrip with herbs and fruits supplied,
And water from the spring.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

“Then, pilgrim, turn, thy cares forego,
All earth-born cares are wrong;
Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.”

5           Soft as the dew from Heaven descends,
          His gentle accents fell,
          The modest stranger lowly bends,
          And follows to the cell.

10           Far in a wilderness obscure
          The lonely mansion lay,
          A refuge to the neighb'ring poor
          And strangers led astray.

15           No stores beneath its humble thatch Required a master's care ;
          The wicket, op'ning with a latch,
          Received the harmless pair.

20           And now, when busy crowds retire
          To take their ev'ning rest,
          The Hermit trimm'd his little fire,
          And cheer'd his pensive guest :

          And spread his vegetable store,
          And gayly press'd and smil'd ;
          And skill'd in legendary lore,
          The ling'ring hours beguil'd.

25           Around in sympathetic mirth
          Its tricks the kitten tries,
          The cricket chirrups in the hearth,
          The crackling fagot flies.

But nothing could a charm impart
 To soothe the stranger's woe ;
 For grief was heavy at his heart,
 And tears began to flow.

His rising cares the Hermit spied, 5
 With ans'ring care opprest :
 "And whence, unhappy youth," he cried,
 "The sorrows of thy breast ?

"From better habitations spurn'd,
 Reluctant dost thou rove ? 10
 Or grieve for friendship unreturn'd,
 Or unregarded love ?

"Alas ! the joys that fortune brings
 Are trifling, and decay ;
 And those who prize the paltry things, 15
 More trifling still than they.

"And what is friendship but a name,
 A charm that lulls to sleep ;
 A shade that follows wealth or fame,
 But leaves the wretch to weep ? 20

"And love is still an emptier sound,
 The modern fair-one's jest ;
 On earth unseen, or only found
 To warm the turtle's nest.

"For shame, fond youth, thy sorrows hush, 25
 And spurn the sex," he said ;
 But while he spoke, a rising blush
 His love-lorn guest betray'd.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

74

Surpris'd, he sees new beauties rise,
Swift mantling to the view ;
Like colors o'er the morning skies,
As bright, as transient too.

5

The bashful look, the rising breast,
Alternate spread alarms :
The lovely stranger stands confest
A maid in all her charms.

10

“And ah ! forgive a stranger rude,
A wretch forlorn,” she cried ;
Whose feet unhallow'd thus intrude
Where Heaven and you reside.

15

“But let a maid thy pity share,
Whom love has taught to stray ;
Who seeks for rest, but finds despair
Companion of her way.

20

“My father liv'd beside the Tyne,
A wealthy lord was he ;
And all his wealth was mark'd as mine,
He had but only me.

25

“To win me from his tender arms,
Unnumber'd suitors came ;
Who prais'd me for imputed charms,
And felt or feign'd a flame.

“Each hour a mercenary crowd
With richest proffers strove ;
Among the rest young Edwin bow'd,
But never talk'd of love.

“In humble, simplest habit clad,
 No wealth nor power had he ;
 Wisdom and worth were all he had,
 But these were all to me.

“And when beside me in the dale, 5
 He carol'd lays of love,
 His breath lent fragrance to the gale,
 And music to the grove.

“The blossom opening to the day,
 The dews of Heaven refin'd, 0
 Could naught of purity display
 To emulate his mind.

“The dew, the blossom on the tree,
 With charms inconstant shine ;
 Their charms were his, but woe to me, 15
 Their constancy was mine.

“For still I tried each fickle art,
 Importunate and vain ;
 And while his passion touch'd my heart,
 I triumph'd in his pain. 20

“Till quite dejected with my scorn,
 He left me to my pride ;
 And sought a solitude forlorn,
 In secret, where he died.

“But mine the sorrow, mine the fault, 25
 And well my life shall pay ;
 I'll seek the solitude he sought,
 And stretch me where he lay.

“ And there forlorn, despairing, hid,
I'll lay me down and die ;
'Twas so for me that Edwin did,
And so for him will I.”

5           “ Forbid it, Heaven !” the Hermit cried,
          And clasp'd her to his breast :
The wond'ring fair one turn'd to chide —
          'Twas Edwin's self that prest.

10           “ Turn, Angelina, ever dear !
          My charmer, turn to see
Thy own, thy long-lost Edwin here
          Restor'd to love and thee.

15           “ Thus let me hold thee to my heart,
          And every care resign :
And shall we never, never part,
          My life — my all that's mine ?

20           “ No, never from this hour to part,
          We'll live and love so true ;
The sigh that rends thy constant heart,
          Shall break thy Edwin's too.”

While this ballad was reading, Sophia seemed to mix an air of tenderness with her approbation. But our tranquillity was soon disturbed by the report of a gun just by us, and immediately after a man was seen bursting through the hedge, to take up the game he had killed. This sportsman was the Squire's chaplain, who had shot one of the blackbirds that so agreeably entertained us. So loud a report, and so near, startled my daughters ; and I could perceive that Sophia, in the fright, had thrown herself into Mr. Burchell's arms for protection. The gentleman came up and asked pardon for having disturbed us, affirming that he was ignorant of our being so near. He therefore sat down by my youngest daughter, and, sportsmanlike, offered her what he had killed that morning. She was going to refuse, but a private look from her mother soon induced her to correct the mistake and accept his present, though with some reluctance. My wife, as usual, discovered her pride in a whisper, observing, that Sophy had made a conquest of the chaplain as well as her sister had of the Squire. I suspected, however, with more probability, that her affections were placed upon a different object. The chaplain's errand was to inform us that Mr. Thornhill had provided music and refreshments, and intended that night giving the young ladies a ball by moonlight, on the grass-plot before our door. "Nor can I deny," continued he, "but I have an interest in being first to deliver this message, as I expect for my reward to be honored with Miss Sophy's hand as a partner." To this my girl replied that she should have no objection, if she could do it with honor. "But here," continued she, "is a gentleman," looking at Mr. Burchell, "who has been my companion in the task for the day, and it is fit he should share in its amusements." Mr. Burchell returned her a compliment for her intentions, but resigned her up to the chaplain, adding, that he was to go that night five miles, being invited to a harvest supper. His refusal appeared to me a little extraordinary; nor could I conceive how so sensible a girl as my youngest could thus prefer a man of broken fortunes to one whose expectations were 5 much greater. But as men are most capable of distinguishing merit in women, so the ladies often form the truest judgments of us. The two sexes seem placed as spies upon each other, and are furnished with different abilities, adapted for mutual inspection.

CHAPTER IX.

TWO LADIES OF GREAT DISTINCTION INTRODUCED.—
SUPERIOR FINERY EVER SEEMS TO CONFER SUPERIOR BREEDING.

MR. BURCHELL had scarcely taken leave, and Sophia consented to dance with the chaplain, when my little ones came running out to tell us that the Squire was come with a crowd of company. Upon our return in, we found our landlord, with a couple of under gentlemen and two young ladies richly dressed, whom he introduced as women of very great distinction and fashion from town. We happened not to have chairs enough for the whole company; but Mr. Thornhill immediately proposed that every gentleman should sit in a lady's lap. This I positively objected to, notwithstanding a look of disapprobation from my wife. Moses was therefore despatched to borrow a couple of chairs; and as we were in want of ladies to make up a set at country dances, the two gentlemen went with him in quest of a couple of partners. Chairs and partners were soon provided. The gentlemen returned with my neighbor Flamborough's rosy daughters, flaunting with red topknots; but an unlucky circumstance was not adverted to—though the Miss Flamboroughs were reckoned the very best dancers in the parish, and understood the jig and roundabout to perfection, yet they were totally unacquainted with country dances. This at first discomposed us; however, after a little shoving and dragging, they 5 at last went merrily on. Our music consisted of two fiddles, with a pipe and tabor. The moon shone bright. Mr. Thornhill and my eldest daughter led up the ball, to the great delight of the spectators; for the neighbors, hearing what was going forward, came flocking about us.

10 My girl moved with so much grace and vivacity, that my wife could not avoid discovering the pride of her heart, by assuring me, that though the little chit did it so cleverly, all the steps were stolen from herself. The ladies of the town strove hard to be equally easy, but
15 without success. They swam, sprawled, languished, and frisked; but all would not do. The gazers indeed owned that it was fine; but neighbor Flamborough observed, that Miss Livy's feet seemed to pat to the music as its echo. After the dance had continued about an hour, the 20 two ladies, who were apprehensive of catching cold, moved to break up the ball. One of them, I thought, expressed her sentiments on this occasion in a very coarse-manner, when she observed, that by the living jingo she was all of a muck of sweat. Upon our return to the 25 house, we found a very elegant cold supper, which Mr. Thornhill had ordered to be brought with him. The conversation at this time was more reserved than before. The two ladies threw my girls quite into the shade; for they would talk of nothing but high-life and high-lived company, with other fashionable topics, such as pictures, taste, Shakespeare, and the musical glasses. 'Tis true they once or twice mortified us sensibly by slipping out an oath; but that appeared to me as the surest symptom of their distinction (though I am since informed that swearing is perfectly unfashionable). Their finery, however, threw a veil over any grossness in their conversation. My daughters seemed to regard their superior accomplishments with envy; and what appeared amiss was ascribed to tip-top quality breeding. 5 But the condescension of the ladies was still superior to their other accomplishments. One of them observed, that had Miss Olivia seen a little more of the world, it would greatly improve her. To which the other added, that a single winter in town would make her little Sophia 15 quite another thing. My wife warmly assented to both; adding, that there was nothing she more ardently desired than to give her girls a single winter's polishing. To this I could not help replying, that their breeding was already superior to their fortune; and that greater 20 refinement would only serve to make their poverty ridiculous, and give them a taste for pleasures they had no right to possess. "And what pleasures," cried Mr. Thornhill, "do they not deserve to possess, who have so much in their power to bestow? As for my part," 25 continued he, "my fortune is pretty large, — love, liberty, and pleasure are my maxims, — but curse me if a settlement of half my estate could give my charming Olivia pleasure, it should be hers; and the only favor I would ask in return would be to add myself to the benefit." I was not such a stranger to the world as to be ignorant that this was the fashionable cant to disguise the insolence of the basest proposal; but I made an effort to 5 suppress my resentment. "Sir," cried I, "the family which you now condescend to favor with your company, has been bred with as nice a sense of honor as you. Any attempts to injure that may be attended with very dangerous consequences. Honor, sir, is our only pos-

10 session at present, and of that last treasure we must be particularly careful." I was soon sorry for the warmth with which I had spoken this, when the young gentleman, grasping my hand, swore he commended my spirit, though he disapproved my suspicions. "As to your 15 present hint," continued he, "I protest nothing was farther from my heart than such a thought. No, by all that's tempting, the virtue that will stand a regular siege was never to my taste; for all my amours are carried by a coup-de-main."

20 The two ladies, who affected to be ignorant of the rest, seemed highly displeased with this last stroke of freedom, and began a very discreet and serious dialogue upon virtue. In this my wife, the chaplain, and I soon joined; and the Squire himself was at last brought to 25 confess a sense of his sorrow for his former excesses. We talked of the pleasures of temperance, and of the sunshine in the mind unpolluted with guilt. I was so well pleased, that my little ones were kept up beyond the usual time, to be edified by so much good conversation. Mr. Thornhill even went beyond me, and demanded if I had any objection to giving prayers. I joyfully embraced the proposal; and in this manner the night was passed in a most comfortable way, till at last the company began to think of returning. The ladies 5 seemed very unwilling to part with my daughters, for whom they had conceived a particular affection, and joined in a request to have the pleasure of their company home. The Squire seconded the proposal, and my wife added her entreaties; the girls too looked upon 10 me as if they wished to go. In this perplexity I made two or three excuses, which my daughters as readily removed; so that at last I was obliged to give a peremptory refusal, for which we had nothing but sullen looks and short answers the whole day ensuing. 15

CHAPTER X.

THE FAMILY ENDEAVORS TO COPE WITH THEIR BETTERS.

— THE MISERIES OF THE POOR WHEN THEY ATTEMPT TO APPEAR ABOVE THEIR CIRCUMSTANCES.

I now began to find that all my long and painful lectures upon temperance, simplicity, and contentment were entirely disregarded. The distinctions lately paid us by our betters awaked that pride which I had laid 5 asleep, but not removed. Our windows again, as formerly, were filled with washes for the neck and face. The sun was dreaded as an enemy to the skin without doors, and the fire as a spoiler of the complexion within. My wife observed that rising too early would hurt her
10 daughters' eyes, that working after dinner would redden their noses, and she convinced me that the hands never looked so white as when they did nothing. Instead, therefore, of finishing George's shirts, we now had them new-modelling their old gauzes, or flourishing upon cat-
15 gut. The poor Miss Flamboroughs, their former gay companions, were cast off as mean acquaintances, and the whole conversation ran upon high-life and high-lived company, with pictures, taste, Shakespeare, and the musical glasses.

20 But we could have borne all this, had not a fortune-telling gypsy come to raise us into perfect sublimity, The tawny sibyl no sooner appeared than my girls came running to me for a shilling a-piece to cross her hand with silver. To say the truth, I was tired of being always wise, and could not help gratifying their request, 5 because I loved to see them happy. I gave each of them a shilling; though for the honor of the family it must be observed that they never went without money themselves, as my wife always let them have a guinea each, to keep in their pockets, but with strict injunctions never to change it. After they had been closeted up with the fortune-teller for some time, I knew by their looks, upon their returning, that they had been promised something great. "Well, my girls, how have you sped? Tell me, Livy, has the fortune-teller given 10 thee a pennyworth?" — "I protest, papa," says the girl. "I believe she deals with somebody that's not right; for she positively declared that I am to be married to a Squire in less than a twelvemonth!" — "Well now, Sophy, my child," said I, "and what sort of a husband 20 are you to have?" — "Sir," replied she, "I am to have a Lord soon after my sister has married the Squire." — "How," cried I, "is that all you are to have for your two shillings? Only a Lord and a Squire for two shillings! You fools, I could have promised you a Prince 25 and a Nabob for half the money."

This curiosity of theirs, however, was attended with very serious effects: we now began to think ourselves designed by the stars to something exalted, and already anticipated our future grandeur. 30

It has been a thousand times observed, and I must observe it once more, that the hours we pass with happy prospects in view are more pleasing than those crowned with fruition. In the first case, we cook the dish to our own appetite! in the latter, nature cooks it for us. It is impossible to repeat the train of agreeable reveries we called up for our entertainment. We looked upon our fortunes as once more rising: and as the whole parish asserted that the Squire was in love with my daughter, she was actually so with him; for they persuaded her into the passion. In this agreeable interval, my wife had the most lucky dreams in the world, which she took care to tell us every morning with great solemnity and exactness. It was one night a coffin and cross-bones, the sign of an approaching wedding; at another time she imagined her daughters' pockets filled with farthings, a certain sign of their being shortly stuffed with gold. The girls themselves had their omens. They felt strange kisses on their lips; they saw rings in the candle, purses bounced from the fire, and true love-knots lurked in the bottom of every teacup.

Towards the end of the week we received a card from the town ladies; in which, with their compliments, they hoped to see all our family at church the Sunday following. All Saturday morning I could perceive, in consequence of this, my wife and daughters in close conference together, and now and then glancing at me with looks that betrayed a latent plot. To be sincere, I had strong suspicions that some absurd proposal was preparing for appearing with splendor the next day. In the evening they began their operations in a very regular manner, and my wife undertook to conduct the siege. After tea, when I seemed in spirits, she began thus: "I fancy, Charles, my dear, we shall have a great deal of good company at our church to-morrow." — "Perhaps we may, my dear," returned I, "though you need be under no uneasiness about that; you shall have a sermon whether there be or not." — "That is what I expect," returned she; "but I think, my dear, we ought to appear there as decently as possible, for who knows what may happen?" — "Your precautions," replied I, "are highly commendable. A decent behavior and appearance in church is what charms me. We should be devout and humble, cheerful and serene." — "Yes," cried she, "I know that; but I mean we should go there in as proper a manner as possible; not altogether like the scrubs about us." — "You are quite right, my dear," returned I, "and I was going to make the very same proposal. The proper manner of going is, to go there as early as possible, to have time for meditation before the service begins."

"Phoo, Charles," interrupted she, "all that is very true; but not what I would be at. I mean, we should go there genteelly. You know the church is two miles off, and I protest I don't like to see my daughters trudging up to their pew all blowzed and red with walking, and looking for all the world as if they had been winners at a smock race. Now, my dear, my proposal is this : there are our two plough-horses, the colt that has been in our family these nine years, and his companion Blackberry, that has scarcely done an earthly thing for this month past. They are both grown fat and lazy.

5 Why should they not do something as well as we ? And let me tell you, when Moses has trimmed them a little, they will cut a very tolerable figure."

To this proposal I objected, that walking would be twenty times more genteel than such a paltry convey-

10 ance, as Blackberry was wall-eyed, and the colt wanted a tail ; that they had never been broke to the rein, but had a hundred vicious tricks ; and that we had but one saddle and pillion in the whole house. All these objections, however, were overruled ; so that I was obliged

15 to comply. The next morning I perceived them not a little busy in collecting such materials as might be necessary for the expedition ; but, as I found it would be a business of time, I walked on to the church before, and they promised speedily to follow. I waited near

20 an hour in the reading-desk for their arrival ; but not finding them come as expected, I was obliged to begin, and went through the service, not without some uneasiness at finding them absent. This was increased when all was finished, and no appearance of the family. I

25 therefore walked back by the horse-way, which was five miles round, though the foot-way was but two ; and when got about half-way home, perceived the procession marching slowly forwards towards the church, — my son, my wife, and the two little ones exalted on one horse, and my two daughters upon the other. I demanded the cause of their delay ; but I soon found by their looks they had met with a thousand misfortunes on the road. The horses had at first refused to move from the door, till Mr. Burchell was kind enough to beat them forward 5 for about two hundred yards with his cudgel. Next, the straps of my wife's pillion broke down, and they were obliged to stop to repair them before they could proceed. After that, one of the horses took it into his head to stand still, and neither blows nor entreaties 10 could prevail with him to proceed. He was just recovering from his dismal situation when I found them ; but perceiving everything safe, I own their present mortification did not much displease me, as it would give me many opportunities of future triumph, and teach my 15 daughters more humility.

CHAPTER XI.

THE FAMILY STILL RESOLVE TO HOLD UP THEIR HEADS.

MICHAELMAS EVE happening on the next day, we were invited to burn nuts and play tricks at neighbor Flamborough's. Our late mortifications had humbled us a little, or it is probable we might have rejected such 5 an invitation with contempt; however, we suffered ourselves to be happy. Our honest neighbor's goose and dumplings were fine, and the lamb's wool, even in the opinion of my wife, who was a connoisseur, was excellent. It is true, his manner of telling stories was not 10 quite so well. They were very long, and very dull, and about himself, and we had laughed at them ten times before; however, we were kind enough to laugh at them once more.

Mr. Burchell, who was of the party, was always fond 15 of seeing some innocent amusement going forward, and set the boys and girls to blind man's buff. My wife too was persuaded to join in the diversion; and it gave me pleasure to think she was not yet too old. In the meantime, my neighbor and I looked on, laughed at every 20 feat, and praised our own dexterity when we were young. Hot cockles succeeded next, questions and commands followed that, and last of all, they sat down to hunt the slipper. As every person may not be acquainted with this primeval pastime, it may be necessary to observe, that the company at this play plant themselves in a ring upon the ground, all except one, who 5 stands in the middle, whose business it is to catch a shoe, which the company shove about under their hams from one to another, something like a weaver's shuttle. As it is impossible, in this case, for the lady who is up to face all the company at once, the great beauty of the 10 play lies in hitting her a thump with the heel of the shoe on that side least capable of making a defence. It was in this manner that my eldest daughter was hemmed in, and thumped about, all blowzed, in spirits, and bawling for fair play, with a voice that might deafen a bal- 15 lad-singer, when, confusion on confusion! who should enter the room but our two great acquaintances from town, Lady Blarney and Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs! Description would but beggar, therefore it is unnecessary to describe this new mortification. 20 Death! To be seen by ladies of such high breeding in such vulgar attitudes! Nothing better could ensue from such a vulgar play of Mr. Flamborough's proposing. We seemed stuck to the ground for some time, as if actually petrified with amazement. 25

The two ladies had been at our house to see us, and finding us from home, came after us hither, as they were uneasy to know what accident could have kept us from church the day before. Olivia undertook to be our prolocutor, and delivered the whole in a summary way, only saying, "We were thrown from our horses." At which account the ladies were greatly concerned; but being told the family received no hurt, they were extremely glad; but being informed that we were almost killed by the fright, they were vastly sorry; but hearing that we had a very good night, they were extremely glad again. Nothing could exceed their complaisance to my daughters; their professions the last evening were warm, but now they were ardent. They protested a desire of having a more lasting acquaintance. Lady Blarney was particularly attached to Olivia; Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs (I love to give the whole name) took a greater fancy to her sister. They supported the conversation between themselves, while my daughters sat silent, admiring their exalted breeding. But as every reader, however beggarly himself, is fond of high-lived dialogues, with anecdotes of Lords, Ladies, and Knights of the Garter, I must beg leave to give him the concluding part of the present conversation.

"All that I know of the matter," cried Miss Skeggs, "is this, that it may be true, or it may not be true: but this I can assure your Ladyship, that the rout was in amaze; his Lordship turned all manner of colors, my Lady fell into a swoon, but Sir Tomkyn, drawing his sword, swore he was hers to the last drop of his blood."

"Well," replied our Peeress, "this I can say, that the Duchess never told me a syllable of the matter, and I believe her Grace would keep nothing a secret from me.

This you may depend upon as a fact, that the next day my Lord Duke cried out three times to his valet de chambre, Jernigan, Jernigan, Jernigan, bring me my garters."

But previously I should have mentioned the very impolite behavior of Mr. Burchell, who, during this discourse, sat with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence would cry out fudge; an expression which displeased us all, and in some measure damped the rising spirit of the conversation.

"Besides, my dear Skeggs," continued our Peeress, 10
 "there is nothing of this in the copy of verses that Dr. Burdock made upon the occasion." — Fudge!

"I am surprised at that," cried Miss Skeggs; "for he seldom leaves anything out, as he writes only for his own amusement. But can your Ladyship favor me with 15 a sight of them?" — Fudge!

"My dear creature," replied our Peeress, "do you think I carry such things about me? Though they are very fine, to be sure, and I think myself something of a judge; at least I know what pleases myself. Indeed, I 20 was ever an admirer of all Dr. Burdock's little pieces; for, except what he does, and our dear Countess at Hanover Square, there's nothing comes out but the most lowest stuff in nature; not a bit of high-life among them." — Fudge!

"Your Ladyship should except," says t'other, "your own things in the Lady's Magazine. I hope you'll say there's nothing low-lived there? But I suppose we are to have no more from that quarter?" — Fudge!

“Why, my dear,” says the Lady, “you know my reader and companion has left me, to be married to Captain Roach, and as my poor eyes won’t suffer me to write myself, I have been for some time looking out for another.

5 A proper person is no easy matter to find, and to be sure thirty pounds a year is a small stipend for a well-bred girl of character, that can read, write, and behave in company; as for the chits about town, there is no bearing them about one.” — Fudge!

10 “That I know,” cried Miss Skeggs, “by experience. For of the three companions I had this last half-year, one of them refused to do plain work an hour in a day; another thought twenty-five guineas a year too small a salary, and I was obliged to send away the third, be-15 cause I suspected an intrigue with the chaplain. Virtue, my dear Lady Blarney, virtue is worth any price; but where is that to be found?” — Fudge!

My wife had been for a long time all attention to this discourse; but was particularly struck with the 20 ter part of it. Thirty pounds and twenty-five guineas a year made fifty-six pounds five shillings English money, all which was in a manner going a-begging, and might easily be secured in the family. She for a moment studied my looks for approbation; and, to own a 25 truth, I was of opinion that two such places would fit our two daughters exactly. Besides, if the Squire had any real affection for my eldest daughter, this would be the way to make her every way qualified for her fortune. My wife therefore was resolved that we should not be deprived of such advantages for want of assurance, and undertook to harangue for the family. "I hope," cried she, "your Ladyships will pardon my present presumption. It is true, we have no right to pretend to such favors; but yet it is natural for me to wish 5 putting my children forward in the world. And I will be bold to say my two girls have had a pretty good education and capacity; at least the country can't show better. They can read, write, and cast accounts; they understand their needle, broadstitch, cross and change, 10 and all manner of plain work; they can pink, point, and frill, and know something of music; they can do up small-clothes; work upon catgut; my eldest can cut paper, and my youngest has a very pretty manner of telling fortunes upon the cards." — Fudge! 15

When she had delivered this pretty piece of eloquence, the two ladies looked at each other a few minutes in silence, with an air of doubt and importance. At last Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs condescended to observe, that the young ladies, from the 20 opinion she could form of them from so slight an acquaintance, seemed very fit for such employments. "But a thing of this kind, madam," cried she, addressing my spouse, "requires a thorough examination into characters, and a more perfect knowledge of each other. 25 Not, madam," continued she, "that I in the least suspect the young ladies' virtue, prudence, and discretion; but there is a form in those things, madam, there is a form."

My wife approved her suspicions very much, observing that she was very apt to be suspicious herself, but referred her to all the neighbors for a character; but this our Peeress declined as unnecessary, alleging that 5 her cousin Thornhill's recommendation would be sufficient, and upon this we rested our petition.

CHAPTER XII.

FORTUNE SEEMS RESOLVED TO HUMBLE THE FAMILY OF WAKEFIELD. — MORTIFICATIONS ARE OFTEN MORE PAINFUL THAN REAL CALAMITIES.

WHEN we were returned home, the night was dedicated to schemes of future conquest. Deborah exerted much sagacity in conjecturing which of the two girls was likely to have the best place, and most opportunities of seeing good company. The only obstacle to our preferment was in obtaining the Squire's recommendation, but he had already shown us too many instances of his friendship to doubt of it now. Even in bed my wife kept up the usual theme: "Well, faith, my dear Charles, between ourselves, I think we have made an excellent day's work of it." — "Pretty well," cried I, not knowing what to say. "What! only pretty well!" returned she. "I think it is very well. Suppose the girls should come to make acquaintances of taste in town! This I am assured of, that London is the only place in the world for all manner of husbands. Besides, my dear, stranger things happen every day; and as ladies of quality are so taken with my daughters, what will not men of quality be? Entre nous, I protest I like my Lady Blarney vastly, so very obliging. However, Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs has my warm heart. But yet, when they came to talk of places in town, you saw at once how I nailed them. Tell me, my dear, don't you think I did for my children there?" — "Ay," returned I, 5 not knowing well what to think of the matter. "Heaven grant they may be both the better for it this day three months!" This was one of those observations I usually made to impress my wife with an opinion of my sagacity; for if the girls succeeded, then it was a pious wish 10 fulfilled; but if anything unfortunate ensued, then it might be looked upon as a prophecy. All this conversation, however, was only preparatory to another scheme, and indeed I dreaded as much. This was nothing less than that, as we were now to hold up our heads a little 15 higher in the world, it would be proper to sell the colt, which was grown old, at a neighboring fair, and buy us a horse that would carry single or double upon an occasion, and make a pretty appearance at church, or upon a visit. This at first I opposed stoutly; but it was as 20 stoutly defended. However, as I weakened, my antagonists gained strength, till at last it was resolved to part with him.

As the fair happened on the following day, I had intentions of going myself; but my wife persuaded me 25 that I had got a cold, and nothing could prevail upon her to permit me from home. "No, my dear," said she, "our son Moses is a discreet boy, and can buy and sell to a very good advantage; you know all our great bargains are of his purchasing. He always stands out and higgles, and actually tires them till he gets a bargain."

As I had some opinion of my son's prudence, I was willing enough to intrust him with his commission; and the next morning I perceived his sisters mighty busy in fitting out Moses for the fair, — trimming his hair, brushing his buckles, and cocking his hat with pins. The business of the toilet being over, we had at last the satisfaction of seeing him mounted upon the colt, with a deal box before him to bring home groceries in. He had on a coat made of that cloth they called thunder and lightning, which, though grown too short, was much too good to be thrown away. His waistcoat was of gosling green, and his sisters had tied his hair with a broad black riband. We all followed him several paces from the door, bawling after him Good luck, Good luck, till we could see him no longer.

He was scarcely gone, when Mr. Thornhill's butler came to congratulate us upon our good fortune, saying, that he overheard his young master mention our names with great commendation.

Good fortune seemed resolved not to come alone. Another footman from the same family followed, with a card for my daughters, importing that the two ladies had received such pleasing accounts from Mr. Thornhill of us all, that, after a few previous inquiries, they hoped to be perfectly satisfied. "Ay," cried my wife, "I now see it is no easy matter to get into the families of the great; but when one once gets in, then, as Moses says, one may go to sleep." To this piece of humor, for she intended it for wit, my daughters assented with a loud laugh of pleasure. In short, such was her satisfaction at this message, that she actually put her hand in her 5 pocket, and gave the messenger sevenpence halfpenny.

This was to be our visiting day. The next that came was Mr. Burchell, who had been at the fair. He brought my little ones a pennyworth of gingerbread each, which my wife undertook to keep for them, and give them by 10 letters at a time. He brought my daughters also a couple of boxes, in which they might keep wafers, snuff, patches, or even money, when they got it. My wife was usually fond of a weasel-skin purse, as being the most lucky; but this by the by. We had still a regard for 15 Mr. Burchell, though his late rude behavior was in some measure displeasing: nor could we now avoid communicating our happiness to him, and asking his advice; although we seldom followed advice, we were all ready enough to ask it. When he read the note from the two 20 ladies, he shook his head, and observed, that an affair of this sort demanded the utmost circumspection. This air of diffidence highly displeased my wife. "I never doubted, sir," cried she, "your readiness to be against my daughters and me. You have more circumspection
25 than is wanted. However, I fancy when we come to ask advice, we will apply to persons who seem to have made use of it themselves."—"Whatever my own conduct may have been, madam," replied he, "is not the present question; though as I have made no use of advice myself, I should in conscience give it to those that will." As I was apprehensive this answer might draw on a repartee, making up by abuse what it wanted in wit, I changed the subject, by seeming to wonder what could keep our son so long at the fair, as it was now almost 5 nightfall. "Never mind our son," cried my wife, "depend upon it he knows what he is about. I'll warrant we'll never see him sell his hen of a rainy day. I have seen him buy such bargains as would amaze one. I'll tell you a good story about that, that will make you 10 split your sides with laughing. But, as I live, yonder comes Moses, without a horse, and the box at his back."

As she spoke, Moses came slowly on foot, and sweating under the deal box, which he had strapped round his shoulders like a peddler. "Welcome, welcome, 15 Moses! Well, my boy, what have you brought us from the fair?"—"I have brought you myself," cried Moses, with a sly look, and resting the box on the dresser. "Ah, Moses," cried my wife, "that we know; but where is the horse?"—"I have sold him," cried Moses, 20 "for three pounds five shillings and twopence."—"Well done, my good boy!" returned she; "I knew you would touch them off. Between ourselves, three pounds five shillings and twopence is no bad day's work. Come, let us have it, then."—"I have brought back no money," 25 cried Moses again. "I have laid it all out on a bargain, and here it is," pulling out a bundle from his breast. "Here they are; a gross of green spectacles, with silver rims and shagreen cases."—"A gross of green spectacles!" repeated my wife in a faint voice. "And you have parted with the colt, and brought us back nothing but a gross of green paltry spectacles!"—"Dear mother," cried the boy, "why won't you listen to 5 reason? I had them a dead bargain, or I should not have bought them. The silver rims alone will sell for double the money."—"A fig for the silver rims!" cried my wife in a passion. "I dare swear they won't sell for above half the money at the rate of broken silver, five

10 shillings an ounce."—"You need be under no uneasiness," cried I, "about selling the rims, for they are not worth sixpence; for I perceive they are only copper varnished over."—"What," cried my wife, "not silver! the rims not silver!"—"No," cried I, "no more silver
15 than your saucepan."—"And so," returned she, "we have parted with the colt, and have only got a gross of green spectacles, with copper rims and shagreen cases! A murrain take such trumpery! The blockhead has been imposed upon, and should have known his company
20 better."—"There, my dear," cried I, "you are wrong; he should not have known them at all."—"Marry, hang the idiot!" returned she, "to bring me such stuff; if I had them I would throw them in the fire."—"There again you are wrong, my dear," cried I; "for though 25 they be copper, we will keep them by us, as copper spectacles, you know, are better than nothing."

By this time the unfortunate Moses was undeceived. He now saw that he had been imposed upon by a prowling sharper, who, observing his figure, had marked him for an easy prey. I therefore asked the circumstance of his deception. He sold the horse, it seems, and walked the fair in search of another. A reverend looking man brought him to a tent under a pretence of having one to sell. "Here," continued Moses, "we met 5 another man, very well dressed, who desired to borrow twenty pounds upon these, saying that he wanted money, and would dispose of them for a third of their value. The first gentleman, who pretended to be my friend, whispered me to buy them, and cautioned me not to let 10 so good an offer pass. I sent for Mr. Flamborough, and they talked him up as finely as they did me, and so at last we were persuaded to buy the two gross between us."

CHAPTER XIII.

MR. BURCHELL IS FOUND TO BE AN ENEMY; FOR HE HAS THE CONFIDENCE TO GIVE DISAGREEABLE ADVICE.

OUR family had now made several attempts to be fine; but some unforeseen disaster demolished each as soon as projected. I endeavored to take the advantage of every disappointment to improve their good sense in proportion as they were frustrated in ambition. "You see, my children," cried I, "how little is to be got by attempts to impose upon the world in coping with our betters. Such as are poor, and will associate with none but the rich, are hated by those they avoid, and despised by those they follow. Unequal combinations are always disadvantageous to the weaker side; the rich having the pleasure, and the poor the inconveniences, that result from them. But come, Dick, my boy, and repeat the fable that you were reading to-day, for the good of the company."

"Once upon a time," cried the child, "a Giant and a Dwarf were friends and kept together. They made a bargain that they would never forsake each other, but go seek adventures. The first battle they fought was with two Saracens, and the Dwarf, who was very courageous, dealt one of the champions a most angry blow. It did the Saracen very little injury, who, lifting up his sword, fairly struck off the poor Dwarf's arm. He was now in a woful plight; but the Giant coming to his assistance, in a short time left the two Saracens dead on the plain, and the Dwarf cut off the dead man's head out of spite. They then travelled on to another adventure. This was against three bloody-minded Satyrs, who were carrying away a damsel in distress. The Dwarf was not quite so fierce now as before; but for all that struck the first blow, which was returned by another that knocked out his eye; but the Giant was soon up with them, and, had they not fled, would certainly have killed them every one. They were all very joyful for this victory, and the damsel who was relieved fell in love with the Giant, and married him. They now travelled far, and farther than I can tell, till they met with a company of robbers. The Giant, for the first time, was foremost now, but the Dwarf was not far behind. The battle was stout and long. Wherever the Giant came, all fell before him; but the Dwarf had like to have been killed more than once. At last the victory declared for the two adventurers, but the Dwarf lost his leg. The Dwarf was now without an arm, a leg, and an eye, while the Giant was without a single wound. Upon which he cried out to his little companion, My little hero, this is glorious sport! let us get one victory more, and then we shall have honor forever. No, cries the Dwarf, who was by this time grown wiser, no, I declare off; I'll fight no more; for I find in every battle that you get all the honor and rewards, but all the blows fall upon me."

I was going to moralize this fable, when our attention was called off to a warm dispute between my wife and Mr. Burchell, upon my daughters' intended expedition to town. My wife very strenuously insisted upon the advantages that would result from it; Mr. Burchell, on the contrary, dissuaded her with great ardor, and I stood neuter. His present dissuasions seemed but the second part of those which were received with so ill a grace in the morning. The dispute grew high, while poor Deborah, instead of reasoning stronger, talked louder, and at last was obliged to take shelter from a defeat in clamor. The conclusion of her harangue, however, was highly displeasing to us all; she knew, she said, of some who had their own secret reasons for what they advised; but, for her part, she wished such to stay from her house for the future. "Madam," cried Burchell, with looks of great composure, which tended to inflame her more, "as for secret reasons, you are right; I have secret reasons, which I forbear to mention, because you are not able to answer those of which I make no secret; but I find my visits here are become troublesome; I'll take my leave therefore now, and perhaps come once more to take a final farewell, when I am quitting the country." Thus saying he took up his hat, nor could the attempts of Sophia, whose looks seemed to upbraid his precipitancy, prevent his going.

When gone, we all regarded each other for some minutes with confusion. My wife, who knew herself to be the cause, strove to hide her concern with a forced smile, and an air of assurance, which I was willing to reprove. "How, woman," cried I to her, "is it thus we 5 treat strangers? Is it thus we return their kindness? Be assured, my dear, that these were the harshest words, and to me the most displeasing, that ever escaped your lips!" — "Why would he provoke me, then?" replied she; "but I know the motives of his advice perfectly well. He would prevent my girls from going to town that he may have the pleasure of my youngest daughter's company here at home. But whatever happens, she shall choose better company than such low-lived fellows as he." — "Low-lived, my dear, do you call 15 him?" cried I; "it is very possible we may mistake this man's character, for he seems upon some occasions the most finished gentleman I ever knew. Tell me, Sophia, my girl, has he ever given you any secret instances of his attachment?" — "His conversation with 20 me, sir," replied my daughter, "has ever been sensible, modest, and pleasing. As to aught else, no, never. Once, indeed, I remember to have heard him say, he never knew a woman who could find merit in a man that seemed poor." — "Such, my dear," cried I, "is the common cant of all the unfortunate or idle. But I hope you have been taught to judge properly of such men, and that it would be even madness to expect happiness from one who has been so very bad an economist of his own. Your mother and I have now better prospects for you. The next winter, which you will probably spend in town, will give you opportunities of making a more prudent choice."

5 What Sophia's reflections were upon this occasion I can't pretend to determine ; but I was not displeased at the bottom that we were rid of a guest from whom I had much to fear. Our breach of hospitality went to my conscience a little ; but I quickly silenced that monitor by 10 two or three specious reasons, which served to satisfy and reconcile me to myself. The pain which conscience gives the man who has already done wrong is soon got over. Conscience is a coward, and those faults it has not strength enough to prevent, it seldom has justice 15 enough to accuse.

CHAPTER XIV.*FRESH MORTIFICATIONS, OR A DEMONSTRATION THAT SEEMING CALAMITIES MAY BE REAL BLESSINGS.

THE journey of my daughters to town was now resolved upon, Mr. Thornhill having kindly promised to inspect their conduct himself, and inform us by letter of their behavior. But it was thought indispensably necessary that their appearance should equal the greatness of 5 their expectations, which could not be done without expense. We debated therefore in full council what were the easiest methods of raising money, or, more properly speaking, what we could most conveniently sell. The deliberation was soon finished; it was found that our 10 remaining horse was utterly useless for the plough without his companion, and equally unfit for the road, as wanting an eye; it was therefore determined that we should dispose of him for the purposes above mentioned, at the neighboring fair, and, to prevent imposition, that 15 I should go with him myself. Though this was one of the first mercantile transactions of my life, yet I had no doubt about acquitting myself with reputation. The opinion a man forms of his own prudence is measured by that of the company he keeps; and as mine was 20 mostly in the family way, I had conceived no unfavorable sentiments of my worldly wisdom. My wife, however, next morning, at parting, after I had got some paces from the door, called me back, to advise me, in a whisper, to have all my eyes about me. .

5 I had, in the usual forms, when I came to the fair, put my horse through all his paces; but for some time had no bidders. At last a chapman approached, and after he had for a good while examined the horse round, finding him blind of one eye, he would have nothing to say to 10 him; a second came up, but observing he had a spavin, declared he would not take him for the driving home; a third perceived he had a windgall, and would bid no money; a fourth knew by his eye that he had the botts; a fifth wondered what the plague I could do at the fair
15 with a blind, spavined, galled hack, that was only fit to be cut up for a dog-kennel. By this time I began to have a most hearty contempt for the poor animal myself, and was almost ashamed at the approach of every customer; for though I did not entirely believe all the fellows 20 told me, yet I reflected that the number of witnesses was a strong presumption they were right; and St. Gregory, upon Good Works, professes himself to be of the same opinion.

I was in this mortifying situation, when a brother 25 clergyman, an old acquaintance, who had also business at the fair, came up, and shaking me by the hand, proposed adjourning to a public-house, and taking a glass of whatever we could get. I readily closed with the offer, and entering an ale-house, we were shown into a little back room, where there was only a venerable old man, who sat wholly intent over a large book, which he was reading. I never in my life saw a figure that prepossessed me more favorably. His locks of silver gray venerably shaded his temples, and his green old age 5 seemed to be the result of health and benevolence. However, his presence did not interrupt our conversation; my friend and I discoursed on the various turns of fortune we had met, — the Whistonian controversy, my last pamphlet, the archdeacon's reply, and the hard 10 measure that was dealt me. But our attention was in a short time taken off by the appearance of a youth who, entering the room, respectfully said something softly to the old stranger. "Make no apologies, my child," said the old man; "to do good is a duty we owe to all our 15 fellow-creatures; take this, I wish it were more; but five pounds will relieve your distress, and you are welcome." The modest youth shed tears of gratitude, and yet his gratitude was scarcely equal to mine. I could have hugged the good old man in my arms, his benevo- 20 lence pleased me so. He continued to read, and we resumed our conversation, until my companion, after some time, recollecting that he had some business to transact in the fair, promised to be soon back; adding, that he always desired to have as much of Dr. Primrose's com- 25 pany as possible. The old gentleman, hearing my name mentioned, seemed to look at me with attention for some time, and when my friend was gone, most respectfully demanded if I was any way related to the great Primrose, that courageous monogamist, who had been the bulwark of the church. Never did my heart feel sincerer rapture than at that moment. "Sir," cried I, "the applause of so good a man as I am sure you are, adds to 5 that happiness in my breast which your benevolence has already excited. You behold before you, sir, that Dr. Primrose, the monogamist, whom you have been pleased to call great. You here see that unfortunate divine, who has so long, and it would ill become me to say,

10 successfully, fought against the deuterogamy of the age." — "Sir," cried the stranger, struck with awe, "I fear I have been too familiar; but you'll forgive my curiosity, sir; I beg pardon." — "Sir," cried I, grasping his hand, "you are so far from displeasing me by your fa-
15 miliarity, that I must beg you'll accept my friendship, as you already have my esteem." — "Then with gratitude I accept the offer," cried he, squeezing me by the hand, "thou glorious pillar of unshaken orthodoxy! and do I behold" — I here interrupted what he was going to say;
20 for though, as an author, I could digest no small share of flattery, yet now my modesty would permit no more. However, no lovers in romance ever cemented a more instantaneous friendship. We talked upon several subjects: at first I thought he seemed rather devout than 25 learned, and began to think he despised all human doctrines as dross. Yet this no way lessened him in my esteem, for I had for some time begun privately to harbor such an opinion myself. I therefore took occasion to observe that the world in general began to be blamably indifferent as to doctrinal matters, and followed human speculations too much. "Ay, sir," replied he, as if he had reserved all his learning to that moment, "Ay, sir, the world is in its dotage, and yet the cosmogony or creation of the world has puzzled philosophers of 5 all ages. What a medley of opinions have they not broached upon the creation of the world! Sanchoniaton, Manetho, Berosus, and Ocellus Lucanus, have all attempted it in vain. The latter has these words, Anarchon ara kai atelutaion to pan, which imply that all 10 things have neither beginning nor end. Manetho also, who lived about the time of Nebuchadon-Asser, — Asser being a Syriac word usually applied as a surname to the kings of that country, as Teglat Prael-Asser, Nabon-Asser, — he, I say, formed a conjecture equally absurd; 15 for, as we usually say, ek to biblion kubernetes, which implies that books will never teach the world; so he attempted to investigate — but, sir, I ask pardon, I am straying from the question." That he actually was; nor could I for my life see how the creation of the world 20 had anything to do with the business I was talking of; but it was sufficient to show me that he was a man of letters, and I now revered him the more. I was resolved therefore to bring him to the touchstone; but he was too mild and too gentle to contend for victory. 25 Whenever I made an observation that looked like a challenge to controversy, he would smile, shake his head, and say nothing; by which I understood he could say much, if he thought proper. The subject therefore insensibly changed from the business of antiquity to that which brought us both to the fair; mine, I told him, was to sell a horse, and very luckily indeed, his was to buy one for one of his tenants. My horse was soon produced, and, in fine, we struck a bargain. Nothing now remained but to pay me, and he accordingly pulled out a thirty-pound note, and bid me change it. Not being in a capacity of complying with this demand, he ordered his footman to be called up, who made his appearance in a very genteel livery. "Here, Abraham," cried he, "go and get gold for this; you'll do it at neighbor Jackson's, or anywhere." While the fellow was gone, he entertained me with a pathetic harangue on the great scarcity of silver, which I undertook to improve by deploring also the great scarcity of gold; so that by the time Abraham returned, we had both agreed that money was never so hard to be come at as now. Abraham returned to inform us that he had been over the whole fair, and could not get change, though he had offered half a crown for doing it. This was a very great disappointment to us all; but the old gentleman, having paused a little, asked me if I knew one Solomon Flamborough in my part of the country. Upon replying that he was my next-door neighbor, "If that be the case, then," returned he, "I believe we shall deal. You shall have a draft upon him, payable at sight; and let me tell you, he is as warm a man as any within five miles round him. Honest Solomon and I have been acquainted many years together. I remember I always beat him at three jumps, but he could hop on one leg farther than I." A draft upon my neighbor was to me the same as money; for I was sufficiently convinced of his ability. The draft was signed, and put into my hands, and Mr. Jenkinson, the old gentleman, his man Abraham, and my horse, old Blackberry, trotted off very well pleased with each other.

After a short interval being left to reflection, I began to recollect that I had done wrong in taking a draft from a stranger, and so prudently resolved upon following the purchaser, and having back my horse. But this was now too late. I therefore made directly homewards, resolving to get the draft changed into money at my friend's as fast as possible. I found my honest neighbor smoking his pipe at his own door, and informing him that I had a small bill upon him, he read it twice over. "You can read the name, I suppose," cried I, "Ephraim Jenkinson." — "Yes," returned he, "the name is written plain enough, and I know the gentleman too, the greatest rascal under the canopy of heaven. This is the very same rogue who sold us the spectacles. Was he not a venerable-looking man with gray hair, and no flaps to his pocket-holes? And did he not talk a long string of learning about Greek, and cosmogony, and the world?" To this I replied with a groan. "Ay," continued he, "he has but that one piece of learning in the world, and he always talks it away whenever he finds a scholar in the company; but I know the rogue, and will catch him yet."

Though I was already sufficiently mortified, my greatest struggle was to come, in facing my wife and daughters. No truant was ever more afraid of returning to school, there to behold the master's visage, than 5 I was of going home. I was determined, however, to anticipate their fury by first falling into a passion myself.

But alas! upon entering, I found the family no way disposed for battle. My wife and girls were all in tears, Mr. Thornhill having been there that day to inform 10 them that their journey to town was entirely over. The two ladies having heard reports of us from some malicious person about us, were that day set out for London. He could neither discover the tendency nor the author of these; but whatever they might be, or whoever might 15 have broached them, he continued to assure our family of his friendship and protection. I found, therefore, that they bore my disappointment with great resignation, as it was eclipsed in the greatness of their own. But what perplexed us most was to think who could be 20 so base as to asperse the character of a family so harmless as ours, too humble to excite envy, and too inoffensive to create disgust.

CHAPTER XV.

ALL MR. BURCHELL'S VILLANY AT ONCE DETECTED.—
THE FOLLY OF BEING OVER WISE.

THAT evening and a part of the following day was employed in fruitless attempts to discover our enemies; scarcely a family in the neighborhood but incurred our suspicions, and each of us had reasons for our opinions best known to ourselves. As we were in this perplex- 5 ity, one of our little boys, who had been playing abroad, brought in a letter-case, which he found on the green. It was quickly known to belong to Mr. Burchell, with whom it had been seen, and upon examination, contained some hints upon different subjects; but what 10 particularly engaged our attention was a sealed note, superscribed, The copy of a letter to be sent to the two ladies at Thornhill Castle. It instantly occurred that he was the base informer, and we deliberated whether the note should not be broke open. I was against it; 15 but Sophia, who said she was sure that of all men he would be the last to be guilty of so much baseness, insisted upon its being read. In this she was seconded by the rest of the family, and at their joint solicitation I read as follows:—

- LADIES, — The bearer will sufficiently satisfy you as to the person from whom this comes: one at least the friend of innocence, and ready to prevent its being seized. I am informed for a truth that you have 5 some intention of bringing two young ladies to town, whom I have some knowledge of, under the character of companions. As I would neither have simplicity imposed upon, nor virtue contaminated, I must offer it as my opinion that the impropriety of such a step will 10 be attended with dangerous consequences. It has never been my way to treat the infamous or the lewd with severity, nor should I now have taken this method of explaining myself, or reproving folly, did it not aim at guilt. Take, therefore, the admonition of a friend, and 15 seriously reflect on the consequences of introducing infamy and vice into retreats where peace and innocence have hitherto resided."

Our doubts were now at an end. There seemed indeed something applicable to both sides in this letter, and its 20 censures might as well be referred to those to whom it was written, as to us; but the malicious meaning was obvious, and we went no farther. My wife had scarcely patience to hear me to the end, but railed at the writer with unrestrained resentment. Olivia was equally se-
25 vere, and Sophia seemed perfectly amazed at his baseness. As for my part, it appeared to me one of the vilest instances of unprovoked ingratitude I had met with; nor could I account for it in any other manner than by imputing it to his desire of detaining my youngest daughter in the country, to have the more frequent opportunities of an interview. In this manner we all sat ruminating upon schemes of vengeance, when the other little boy came running in to tell us that Mr. Burchell was approaching at the other end of the field. It is easier to conceive than describe the complicated sensations which are felt from the pain of a recent injury and the pleasure of an approaching vengeance. Though our intentions were only to upbraid him with his ingratitude, yet it was resolved to do it in a manner that would be perfectly cutting. For this purpose we agreed to meet him with our usual smiles; to chat in the beginning with more than ordinary kindness; to amuse him a little; and then, in the midst of the flattering calm, to burst upon him like an earthquake, and overwhelm him with a sense of his own baseness. This being resolved upon, my wife undertook to manage the business herself, as she really had some talents for such an undertaking. We saw him approach; he entered, drew a chair, and sat down. "A fine day, Mr. Burchell."—"A very fine day, Doctor; though I fancy we shall have some rain by the shooting of my corns."—"The shooting of your horns!" cried my wife in a loud fit of laughter, and then asked pardon for being fond of a joke. "Dear madam," replied he, "I pardon you with all my heart; for I protest I should not have thought it a joke had you not told me."—"Perhaps not, sir," cried my wife, winking at us; "and yet I dare say you can tell us how many jokes go to an ounce." — "I fancy, madam," returned Burchell, "you have been reading a jest book this morning, that ounce of jokes is so very good a conceit; and yet, madam, I had rather see half an ounce

5 of understanding." — "I believe you might," cried my wife, still smiling at us, though the laugh was against her; "and yet I have seen some men pretend to understanding that have very little." — "And no doubt," returned her antagonist, "you have known ladies set up
10 for wit that had none." I quickly began to find that my wife was likely to gain but little at this business, so I resolved to treat him in a style of more severity myself. "Both wit and understanding," cried I, "are trifles without integrity; it is that which gives value to 15 every character. The ignorant peasant without fault is greater than the philosopher with many; for what is genius or courage without a heart? An honest man is the noblest work of God."

"I always held that hackneyed maxim of Pope," 20 returned Mr. Burchell, "as very unworthy a man of genius, and a base desertion of his own superiority. As the reputation of books is raised, not by their freedom from defect, but the greatness of their beauties, so should that of men be prized, not for their exemption 25 from fault, but the size of those virtues they are possessed of. The scholar may want prudence, the statesman may have pride, and the champion ferocity, but shall we prefer to these the low mechanic, who laboriously plods through life without censure or applause?"

We might as well prefer the tame correct paintings of the Flemish school to the erroneous but sublime animations of the Roman pencil."

"Sir," replied I, "your present observation is just, when there are shining virtues and minute defects; 5 but when it appears that great vices are opposed in the same mind to as extraordinary virtues, such a character deserves contempt."

"Perhaps," cried he, "there may be some such monster as you describe, of great vices joined to great vir- 10 tues; yet in my progress through life, I never yet found one instance of their existence; on the contrary, I have ever perceived, that where the mind was capacious, the affections were good. And, indeed, Providence seems kindly our friend in this particular, thus to debilitate 15 the understanding where the heart is corrupt, and diminish the power where there is the will to do mischief. This rule seems to extend even to other animals: the little vermin race are ever treacherous, cruel, and cowardly, whilst those endowed with strength and power 20 are generous, brave, and gentle."

"These observations sound well," returned I, "and yet it would be easy this moment to point out a man," — and I fixed my eyes steadfastly upon him, — "whose head and heart form a most detestable contrast. Ay, 25 sir," continued I, raising my voice, "and I am glad to have this opportunity of detecting him in the midst of his fancied security. Do you know this, sir, this pocket-book?" — "Yes, sir," returned he, with a face of impen-ettable assurance, "that pocket-book is mine, and I am glad you have found it." — "And do you know," cried I, "this letter? Nay, never falter, man; but look me full in the face; I say, do you know this letter?" — "That 5 letter," returned he; "yes, it was I that wrote that letter." — "And how could you," said I, "so basely, so ungratefully, presume to write this letter?" — "And how came you," replied he, with looks of unparalleled effrontery, "so basely to presume to break open this

10 letter? Don't you know, now, I could hang you all for this? All that I have to do is to swear at the next Justice's that you have been guilty of breaking open the lock of my pocket-book, and so hang you all up at this door." This piece of unexpected insolence
15 raised me to such a pitch that I could scarcely govern my passion. "Ungrateful wretch! begone, and no longer pollute my dwelling with thy baseness! begone, and never let me see thee again! Go from my door, and the only punishment I wish thee is an alarmed conscience, 20 which will be a sufficient tormentor!" So saying, I threw him his pocket-book, which he took up with a smile, and shutting the clasps with the utmost composure, left us, quite astonished at the serenity of his assurance. My wife was particularly enraged that nothing 25 could make him angry, or make him seem ashamed of his villainies. "My dear," cried I, willing to calm those passions that had been raised too high among us, "we are not surprised that bad men want shame; they only blush at being detected in doing good, but glory in their 30 vices.

“Guilt and shame, says the allegory, were at first companions, and, in the beginning of their journey, inseparably kept together. But their union was soon found to be disagreeable and inconvenient to both. Guilt gave Shame frequent uneasiness, and Shame often 5 betrayed the secret conspiracies of Guilt. After long disagreement, therefore, they at length consented to part forever. Guilt boldly walked forward alone, to overtake Fate, that went before in the shape of an executioner; but Shame, being naturally timorous, returned 10 back to keep company with Virtue, which in the beginning of their journey they had left behind. Thus, my children, after men have travelled through a few stages in vice, Shame forsakes them, and returns back to wait upon the few virtues they have still remaining.” 15

CHAPTER XVI.

THE FAMILY USE ART, WHICH IS OPOSED WITH STILL GREATER.

WHATEVER might have been Sophia's sensations, the rest of the family was easily consoled for Mr. Burchell's absence by the company of our landlord, whose visits now became more frequent and longer. Though he had 5 been disappointed in procuring my daughters the amusements of the town as he designed, he took every opportunity of supplying them with those little recreations which our retirement would admit of. He usually came in the morning, and while my son and I followed our
10 occupations abroad, he sat with the family at home, and amused them by describing the town, with every part of which he was particularly acquainted. He could repeat all the observations that were retailed in the atmosphere of the playhouses, and had all the good things of the 15 high wits by rote long before they made their way into the jest books. The intervals between conversation were employed in teaching my daughters piquet, or sometimes in setting my two little ones to box, to make them sharp, as he called it; but the hopes of having a thousand schemes to entrap him, or, to speak more tenderly, used every art to magnify the merit of her daughter. If the cakes at tea eat short and crisp, they were made by Olivia; if the gooseberry wine was well knit, the gooseberries were of her gathering; it was her 5 fingers which gave the pickles their peculiar green; and in the composition of a pudding, it was her judgment that mixed the ingredients. Then the poor woman would sometimes tell the Squire that she thought him and Olivia extremely of a size, and would bid both stand 10 up to see which was tallest. These instances of cunning, which she thought impenetrable, yet which everybody saw through, were very pleasing to our benefactor, who gave every day some new proofs of his passion, which, though they had not arisen to proposals of mar- 15 riage, yet we thought fell but little short of it; and his slowness was attributed sometimes to native bashfulness, and sometimes to the fear of offending his uncle. An occurrence, however, which happened soon after, put beyond a doubt that he designed to become one of 20 our family; my wife even regarded it as an absolute promise.
20 him for a son-in-law in some measure blinded us to all his imperfections. It must be owned that my wife laid

My wife and daughters happening to return a visit to neighbor Flamborough's, found that family had lately got their pictures drawn by a limner, who travelled the 25 country, and took likenesses for fifteen shillings a head. As this family and ours had long a sort of rivalry in point of taste, our spirit took the alarm at this stolen march upon us, and notwithstanding all I could say, and

I said much, it was resolved that we should have our pictures done too. Having, therefore, engaged the limner, — for what could I do? — our next deliberation was to show the superiority of taste in the attitudes. As 5 for our neighbor's family, there were seven of them, and they were drawn with seven oranges, a thing quite out of taste, no variety in life, no composition in the world. We desired to have something in a brighter style, and after many debates, at length came to an unanimous res-
10 olution of being drawn together in one large historical family piece. This would be cheaper, since one frame would serve for all, and it would be infinitely more genteel; for all families of any taste were now drawn in the same manner. As we did not immediately recollect
15 an historical subject to hit us, we were contented each with being drawn as independent historical figures. My wife desired to be represented as Venus, and the painter was desired not to be too frugal of his diamonds in her stomacher and hair. Her two little ones were to 20 be as Cupids by her side, while I, in my gown and band, was to present her with my books on the Whistonian controversy. Olivia would be drawn as an Amazon sitting upon a bank of flowers, dressed in a green Joseph, richly laced with gold, and a whip in her hand. Sophia
25 was to be a shepherdess, with as many sheep as the painter could put in for nothing; and Moses was to be dressed out with a hat and white feather. Our taste so much pleased the Squire that he insisted on being put as one of the family in the character of Alexander the Great, at Olivia's feet. This was considered by us all as an indication of his desire to be introduced into the family, nor could we refuse his request. The painter was therefore set to work, and as he wrought with assiduity and expedition, in less than four days the whole 5 was completed. The piece was large, and it must be owned he did not spare his colors; for which my wife gave him great encomiums. We were all perfectly satisfied with his performance; but an unfortunate circumstance had not occurred till the picture was finished, 10 which now struck us with dismay. It was so very large that we had no place in the house to fix it. How we all came to disregard so material a point is inconceivable; but certain it is we had been all greatly remiss. The picture, therefore, instead of gratifying our 15 vanity, as we hoped, leaned in a most mortifying manner against the kitchen wall, where the canvas was stretched and painted, much too large to be got through any of the doors, and the jest of all our neighbors. One compared it to Robinson Crusoe's long-boat, too large to 20 be removed; another thought it more resembled a reel in a bottle; some wondered how it could be got out, but still more were amazed how it ever got in.

But though it excited the ridicule of some, it effectually raised more malicious suggestions in many. The 25 Squire's portrait being found united with ours was an honor too great to escape envy. Scandalous whispers began to circulate at our expense, and our tranquillity was continually disturbed by persons who came as friends to tell us what was said of us by enemies. These reports we always resented with becoming spirit: but scandal ever improves by opposition.

We once again, therefore, entered into a consultation
5 upon obviating the malice of our enemies, and at last came to a resolution which had too much cunning to give me entire satisfaction. It was this: as our principal object was to discover the honor of Mr. Thornhill's addresses, my wife undertook to sound him by pretending
10 ing to ask his advice in the choice of a husband for her eldest daughter. If this was not found sufficient to induce him to a declaration, it was then resolved to terrify him with a rival. To this last step, however, I would by no means give my consent, till Olivia gave me the 15 most solemn assurances that she would marry the person provided to rival him upon this occasion, if he did not prevent it by taking her himself. Such was the scheme laid, which, though I did not strenuously oppose, I did not entirely approve.

20 The next time, therefore, that Mr. Thornhill came to see us, my girls took care to be out of the way, in order to give their mamma an opportunity of putting their scheme into execution; but they only retired to the next room, whence they could overhear the whole conversation.
25 My wife artfully introduced it by observing that one of the Miss Flamboroughs was like to have a good match of it in Mr. Spanker. To this the Squire assenting, she proceeded to remark, that they who had warm fortunes were always sure of getting good husbands;

“But heaven help,” continued she, “the girls that have none. What signifies beauty, Mr. Thornhill? or what signifies all the virtue, and all the qualifications in the world, in this age of self-interest? It is not what is she? but what has she? is all the cry.” 5

“Madam,” returned he, “I highly approve the justice, as well as the novelty of your remarks, and if I were a king it should be otherwise. It should, then, indeed, be fine times with the girls without fortunes: our two young ladies should be the first for whom I would provide.” 10

“Ah, sir,” returned my wife, “you are pleased to be facetious, but I wish I were a queen, and then I know where my eldest daughter should look for a husband. But, now that you have put it into my head, seriously, 15 Mr. Thornhill, can’t you recommend me a proper husband for her? she is now nineteen years old, well grown and well educated, and, in my humble opinion, does not want for parts.”

“Madam,” replied he, “if I were to choose, I would 20 find out a person possessed of every accomplishment that can make an angel happy. One with prudence, fortune, taste, and sincerity; such, madam, would be, in my opinion, the proper husband.” — “Ay, sir,” said she; “but do you know of any such person?” — “No, madam,” re- 25 turned he; “it is impossible to know any person that deserves to be her husband; she’s too great a treasure for one man’s possession; she’s a goddess! Upon my soul, I speak what I think; she’s an angel!” — “Ah, Mr.

Thornhill, you only flatter my poor girl; but we have been thinking of marrying her to one of your tenants, whose mother is lately dead, and who wants a manager; you know whom I mean, farmer Williams, a warm man, 5 Mr. Thornhill, able to give her good bread, and who has several times made her proposals (which was actually the case); but, sir," concluded she, "I should be glad to have your approbation of our choice." — "How, madam," replied he, "my approbation! My approbation of such 10 a choice! Never. What! sacrifice so much beauty and sense and goodness to a creature insensible of the blessing! Excuse me, I can never approve of such a piece of injustice! And I have my reasons." — "Indeed, sir," cried Deborah, "if you have your reasons that's another 15 affair; but I should be glad to know these reasons." — "Excuse me, madam," returned he, "they lie too deep for discovery (laying his hand upon his bosom); they remain buried, riveted here."

After he was gone, upon a general consultation, we 20 could not tell what to make of these fine sentiments. Olivia considered them as instances of the most exalted passion; but I was not quite so sanguine; it seemed to me pretty plain that they had more of love than matrimony in them; yet whatever they might portend, it was 25 resolved to prosecute the scheme of farmer Williams, who, from my daughter's first appearance in the country, had paid her his addresses.

CHAPTER XVII.

SCARCELY ANY VIRTUE FOUND TO RESIST THE POWER OF LONG AND PLEASING TEMPTATION.

As I only studied my child's real happiness, the assiduity of Mr. Williams pleased me, as he was in easy circumstances, prudent, and sincere. It required but very little encouragement to revive his former passion ; so that in an evening or two he and Mr. Thornhill met 5 at our house, and surveyed each other for some time with looks of anger ; but Williams owed his landlord no rent, and little regarded his indignation. Olivia, on her side, acted the coquette to perfection, if that might be called acting which was her real character, pretending to 10 lavish all her tenderness on her new lover. Mr. Thornhill appeared quite dejected at this preference, and with a pensive air took leave, though I own it puzzled me to find him so much in pain as he appeared to be, when he had it in his power so easily to remove the cause, by 15 declaring an honorable passion. But whatever uneasiness he seemed to endure, it could easily be perceived that Olivia's anguish was still greater. After any of these interviews between her lovers, of which there were several, she usually retired to solitude, and there in- 20 dulged her grief. It was in such a situation I found her one evening, after she had been for some time supporting a fictitious gayety. "You now see, my child," said I, "that your confidence in Mr. Thornhill's passion was all a dream; he permits the rivalry of another, every way

5 his inferior, though he knows it lies in his power to secure you to himself by a candid declaration." — "Yes, papa," returned she, "but he has his reasons for this delay; I know he has. The sincerity of his looks and words convinces me of his real esteem. A short time, I
10 hope, will discover the generosity of his sentiments, and convince you that my opinion of him has been more just than yours." — "Olivia, my darling," returned I, "every scheme that has been hitherto pursued to compel him to a declaration has been proposed and planned by your-
15 self, nor can you in the least say that I have constrained you. But you must not suppose, my dear, that I will ever be instrumental in suffering his honest rival to be the dupe of your ill-placed passion. Whatever time you require to bring your fancied admirer to an explanation
20 shall be granted; but at the expiration of that term, if he is still regardless, I must absolutely insist that honest Mr. Williams shall be rewarded for his fidelity. The character which I have hitherto supported in life demands this from me, and my tenderness as a parent
25 shall never influence my integrity as a man. Name then your day; let it be as distant as you think proper; and, in the mean time, take care to let Mr. Thornhill know the exact time on which I design delivering you up to another. If he really loves you, his own good sense will readily suggest that there is but one method alone to prevent his losing you forever." This proposal, which she could not avoid considering as perfectly just, was readily agreed to. She again renewed her most positive promise of marrying Mr. Williams, in case of 5 the other's insensibility; and at the next opportunity, in Mr. Thornhill's presence, that day month was fixed upon for her nuptials with his rival.

Such vigorous proceedings seemed to redouble Mr. Thornhill's anxiety; but what Olivia really felt gave 10 me some uneasiness. In this struggle between prudence and passion her vivacity quite forsook her, and every opportunity of solitude was sought, and spent in tears. One week passed away; but Mr. Thornhill made no efforts to restrain her nuptials. The succeeding week 15 he was still assiduous, but not more open. On the third he discontinued his visits entirely, and instead of my daughter testifying any impatience as I expected, she seemed to retain a pensive tranquillity, which I looked upon as resignation. For my own part, I was 20 now sincerely pleased with thinking that my child was going to be secured in a continuance of competence and peace, and frequently applauded her resolution in preferring happiness to ostentation.

It was within about four days of her intended nup- 25 tials that my little family at night were gathered round a charming fire, telling stories of the past, and laying schemes for the future; busy in forming a thousand projects, and laughing at whatever folly came uppermost. "Well, Moses," cried I, "we shall soon, my boy, have a wedding in the family; what is your opinion of matters and things in general?" — "My opinion, father, is that all things go on very well; and I was just now

 5 thinking that when sister Livy is married to farmer Williams, we shall then have the loan of his cider-press and brewing tubs for nothing." — "That we shall, Moses," cried I, "and he will sing us Death and the Lady, to raise our spirits into the bargain." — "He has 10 taught that song to our Dick," cried Moses, "and I think he goes through with it very prettily." — "Does he so?" cried I; "then let us have it. Where's little Dick? let him up with it boldly." — "My brother Dick," cried Bill, my youngest, "is just gone out with sister Livy; but Mr.
 15 Williams has taught me two songs, and I'll sing them for you, papa. Which song do you choose, The Dying Swan, or The Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog?" — "The elegy, child, by all means," said I; "I never heard that yet; and Deborah, my life, grief you know is 20 dry, let us have a bottle of the best gooseberry wine to keep up our spirits. I have wept so much at all sorts of elegies of late, that without an enlivening glass I am sure this will overcome me; and Sophy, love, take your guitar, and thrum in with the boy a little."

AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF A MAD DOG.

25

Good people all of every sort,
 Give ear unto my song,
 And if you find it wondrous short
 It cannot hold you long.

In Islington there was a man,
Of whom the world might say,
That still a godly race he ran
Whene'er he went to pray.

A kind and gentle heart he had, 5
To comfort friends and foes;
The naked every day he clad,
When he put on his clothes.

And in that town a dog was found,
As many dogs there be, 10
Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
And curs of low degree.

This dog and man at first were friends;
But when a pique began,
The dog, to gain some private ends, 15
Went mad, and bit the man.

Around from all the neighboring streets
The wondering neighbors ran,
And swore the dog had lost his wits,
To bite so good a man. 20

The wound it seemed both sore and sad
To every Christian eye;
And while they swore the dog was mad,
They swore the man would die.

But soon a wonder came to light, 25
That show'd the rogues they lied —
The man recover'd of the bite,
The dog it was that died.

“A very good boy, Bill, upon my word, and an elegy that may be truly called tragical. Come, my children, here’s Bill’s health, and may he one day be a bishop!”

“With all my heart,” cried my wife; “and if he but 5 preaches as well as he sings, I make no doubt of him. The most of his family, by his mother’s side, could sing a good song: it was a common saying in our country, that the family of the Blenkinsops could never look 10 straight before them, nor the Hugginsons blow out a candle; that there were none of the Grograms but could sing a song, or of the Marjorams but could tell a story.”
— “However that be,” cried I, “the most vulgar ballad of them all generally pleases me better than the fine modern odes, and things that petrify us in a single 15 stanza, productions that we at once detest and praise. Put the glass to your brother, Moses. The great fault of these elegiasts is that they are in despair for griefs that give the sensible part of mankind very little pain. A lady loses her muff, her fan, or her lap-dog, and so 20 the silly poet runs home to versify the disaster.”

“That may be the mode,” cried Moses, “in sublimer compositions; but the Ranelagh songs that come down to us are perfectly familiar, and all cast in the same mould: Colin meets Dolly, and they hold a dialogue 25 together; he gives her a fairing to put in her hair, and she presents him with a nosegay; and then they go together to a church, where they give good advice to young nymphs and swains to get married as fast as they can.”

“And very good advice too,” cried I; “and I am told there is not a place in the world where advice can be given with so much propriety as there; for as it persuades us to marry, it also furnishes us with a wife; and surely that must be an excellent market, my boy, 5 where we are told what we want, and supplied with it when wanting.”

“Yes, sir,” returned Moses, “and I know of but two such markets for wives in Europe, — Ranelagh in England, and Fontarabia in Spain. The Spanish market is 10 open once a year; but our English wives are salable every night.”

“You are right, my boy,” cried his mother. “Old England is the only place in the world for husbands to get wives.” — “And for wives to manage their hus- 15 bands,” interrupted I. “It is a proverb abroad that if a bridge were built across the sea, all the ladies of the Continent would come over to take pattern from ours; for there are no such wives in Europe as our own. But let us have one bottle more, Deborah, my life; and, 20 Moses, give us a good song. What thanks do we not owe to Heaven for thus bestowing tranquillity, health, and competence! I think myself happier now than the greatest monarch upon earth. He has no such fireside, nor such pleasant faces about it. Yes, Deborah, we are 25 now growing old; but the evening of our life is likely to be happy. We are descended from ancestors that knew no stain, and we shall leave a good and virtuous race of children behind us. While we live, they will be our support and our pleasure here; and when we die, they will transmit our honor untainted to posterity. Come, my son, we wait for a song; let us have a chorus. But where is my darling Olivia? That little cherub's

5 voice is always sweetest in the concert." Just as I spoke Dick came running in. "O papa, papa, she is gone from us, she is gone from us; my sister Livy is gone from us forever." — "Gone, child!" — "Yes, she is gone off with two gentlemen in a post-chaise, and one
10 of them kissed her, and said he would die for her; and she cried very much, and was for coming back; but he persuaded her again, and she went into the chaise, and said, O, what will my poor papa do when he knows I am undone!" — "Now then," cried I, "my children, go and
15 be miserable; for we shall never enjoy one hour more. And O, may Heaven's everlasting fury light upon him and his! Thus to rob me of my child! And sure it will, for taking back my sweet innocent that I was leading up to Heaven. Such sincerity as my child was 20 possessed of! But all our earthly happiness is now over! Go, my children, go and be miserable and infamous; for my heart is broken within me!" — "Father," cried my son, "is this your fortitude?" — "Fortitude, child! — yes, ye shall see I have fortitude! Bring me 25 my pistols. I'll pursue the traitor; while he is on earth, I'll pursue him. Old as I am, he shall find I can sting him yet. The villain! The perfidious villain!" I had by this time reached down my pistols, when my poor wife, whose passions were not as strong as mine, caught me in her arms. "My dearest, dearest husband," cried she, "the Bible is the only weapon that is fit for your old hands now. Open that, my love, and read our anguish into patience, for she has vilely deceived us." — "Indeed, sir," resumed my son, after a 5 pause, "your rage is too violent and unbecoming. You should be my mother's comforter, and you increase her pain. It ill suited you and your reverend character thus to curse your greatest enemy; you should not have cursed him, villain as he is." — "I did not curse him, 10 child, did I?" — "Indeed, sir, you did; you curst him twice." — "Then may Heaven forgive me and him if I did! And now, my son, I see it was more than human benevolence that first taught us to bless our enemies! Blessed be His holy name for all the good He hath 15 given, and for all that He hath taken away. But it is not — it is not a small distress that can wring tears from these old eyes, that have not wept for so many years. My child! To undo my darling; — may confusion seize — Heaven forgive me, what am I about to 20 say! You may remember, my love, how good she was, and how charming; till this vile moment all her care was to make us happy. Had she but died! But she is gone, the honor of our family contaminated, and I must look out for happiness in other worlds than here. But, 25 my child, you saw them go off; perhaps he forced her away? If he forced her, she may yet be innocent." — "Ah, no, sir," cried the child; "he only kissed her, and called her his angel, and she wept very much, and leaned upon his arm, and they drove off very fast." — "She's an ungrateful creature," cried my wife, who could scarcely speak for weeping, "to use us thus. She never had the least constraint put upon her affections. The vile strumpet has basely deserted her parents without any provocation, thus to bring your gray hairs to the grave; and I must shortly follow."

In this manner that night, the first of our real misfortunes, was spent in the bitterness of complaint, and 10 ill-supported sallies of enthusiasm. I determined, however, to find out our betrayer, wherever he was, and reproach his baseness. The next morning we missed our wretched child at breakfast, where she used to give life and cheerfulness to us all. My wife, as before, 15 attempted to ease her heart by reproaches. "Never," cried she, "shall the vilest stain of our family again darken these harmless doors. I will never call her daughter more. No, let the strumpet live with her vile seducer; she may bring us to shame, but she shall never 20 more deceive us."

"Wife," said I, "do not talk thus hardly; my detestation of her guilt is as great as yours; but ever shall this house and this heart be open to a poor returning repentant sinner. The sooner she returns from her transgressions, the more welcome shall she be to me. For the first 25 time the very best may err; art may persuade, and novelty spread out its charm. The first fault is the child of simplicity, but every other the offspring of guilt. Yes, the wretched creature shall be welcome to this heart and this house, though stained with ten thousand vices. I will again hearken to the music of her voice, again will I hang fondly on her bosom, if I find but repentance there. My son, bring hither my Bible and my staff; I will pursue her wherever she is; 5 and though I cannot save her from shame, I may prevent the continuance of iniquity."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE PURSUIT OF A FATHER TO RECLAIM A LOST CHILD TO VIRTUE.

THOUGH the child could not describe the gentleman's person who handed his sister into the post-chaise, yet my suspicions fell entirely upon our young landlord, whose character for such intrigues was but too well
5 known. I therefore directed my steps towards Thornhill Castle, resolving to upbraid him, and if possible to bring back my daughter; but before I had reached his seat, I was met by one of my parishioners, who said he saw a young lady resembling my daughter in a post-
10 chaise with a gentleman, whom, by the description, I could only guess to be Mr. Burchell, and that they drove very fast. This information, however, did by no means satisfy me. I therefore went to the young Squire's, and though it was yet early, insisted upon see-15 ing him immediately. He soon appeared with the most open familiar air, and seemed perfectly amazed at my daughter's elopement, protesting upon his honor that he was quite a stranger to it. I now, therefore, condemned my former suspicions, and could turn them only on Mr.
20 Burchell, who I recollected had of late several private conferences with her; but the appearance of another witness left no room to doubt his villany, who averred that he and my daughter were actually gone towards the Wells, about thirty miles off, where there was a great deal of company. Being driven to that state of mind in which we all are more ready to act precipitately than to 5 reason right, I never debated with myself whether these accounts might not have been given by persons purposely placed in my way to mislead me, but resolved to pursue my daughter and her fancied deluder thither. I walked along with earnestness, and inquired of several 10 by the way; but received no accounts, till, entering the town, I was met by a person on horseback, whom I remembered to have seen at the Squire's, and he assured me, that if I followed them to the races, which were but thirty miles farther, I might depend upon overtak- 15 ing them; for he had seen them dance there the night before, and the whole assembly seemed charmed with my daughter's performance. Early the next day I walked forward to the races, and about four in the afternoon I came upon the course. The company made a 20 very brilliant appearance, all earnestly employed in one pursuit, that of pleasure; how different from mine, that of reclaiming a lost child to virtue! I thought I perceived Mr. Burchell at some distance from me; but, as if he dreaded an interview, upon my approaching him he 25 mixed among a crowd, and I saw him no more. I now reflected that it would be to no purpose to continue my pursuit farther, and resolved to return home to an innocent family who wanted my assistance. But the agitations of my mind, and the fatigues I had undergone, threw me into a fever, the symptoms of which I perceived before I came off the course. This was another unexpected stroke, as I was more than seventy 5 miles distant from home ; however, I retired to a little ale-house by the roadside, and in this place, the usual retreat of indigence and frugality, I laid me down patiently to wait the issue of my disorder. I languished here for nearly three weeks ; but at last my constitution

10 prevailed, though I was unprovided with money to defray the expenses of my entertainment. It is possible the anxiety from this last circumstance alone might have brought on a relapse, had I not been supplied by a traveller, who stopped to take a cursory refreshment.
15 This person was no other than the philanthropic bookseller in St. Paul's Churchyard, who has written so many little books for children : he called himself their friend ; but he was the friend of all mankind. He was no sooner alighted, but he was in haste to be gone ; for he 20 was ever on business of the utmost importance, and was at that time actually compiling materials for the history of one Mr. Thomas Trip. I immediately recollected this good-natured man's red, pimpled face ; for he had published for me against the Deuterogamists of the age, 25 and from him I borrowed a few pieces, to be paid at my return. Leaving the inn, therefore, as I was yet but weak, I resolved to return home by easy journeys of ten miles a day. My health and usual tranquillity were almost restored, and I now condemned that pride which had made me refractory to the hand of correction. Man little knows what calamities are beyond his patience to bear, till he tries them : as in ascending the heights of ambition, which look bright from below, every step we rise shows us some new and gloomy prospect of hidden 5 disappointment ; so in our descent from the summits of pleasure, though the vale of misery below may appear at first dark and gloomy, yet the busy mind, still attentive to its own amusement, finds, as we descend, something to flatter and to please. Still, as we approach, 10 the darkest objects appear to brighten, and the mental eye becomes adapted to its gloomy situation.

I now proceeded forward, and had walked about two hours, when I perceived what appeared at a distance like a wagon, which I was resolved to overtake ; but 15 when I came up with it, found it to be a strolling company's cart, that was carrying their scenes and other theatrical furniture to the next village, where they were to exhibit. The cart was attended only by the person who drove it, and one of the company, as 20 the rest of the players were to follow the ensuing day. "Good company upon the road," says the proverb, "is the shortest cut." I therefore entered into conversation with the poor player ; and as I once had some theatrical powers myself, I disserted on such topics with my 25 usual freedom ; but as I was pretty much unacquainted with the present state of the stage, I demanded who were the present theatrical writers in vogue, who the Drydens and Otways of the day ? "I fancy, sir," cried the player, "few of our modern dramatists would think themselves much honored by being compared to the writers you mention. Dryden's and Rowe's manner, sir, are quite out of fashion; our taste has gone back a 5 whole century; Fletcher, Ben Jonson, and all the plays of Shakespeare, are the only things that go down."

— "How," cried I, "is it possible the present age can be pleased with that antiquated dialect, that obsolete humor, those overcharged characters, which abound in 10 the works you mention?" — "Sir," returned my companion, "the public think nothing about dialect, or humor, or character, for that is none of their business; they only go to be amused, and find themselves happy when they can enjoy a pantomime, under the sanction of
15 Jonson's or Shakespeare's name." — "So then, I suppose," cried I, "that our modern dramatists are rather imitators of Shakespeare than of nature." — "To say the truth," returned my companion, "I don't know that they imitate anything at all; nor indeed does the public
20 require it of them; it is not the composition of the piece, but the number of starts and attitudes that may be introduced into it, that elicits applause. I have known a piece, with not one jest in the whole, shrugged into popularity, and another saved by the poet's throw-
25 ing in a fit of the gripes. No, sir, the works of Congreve and Farquhar have too much wit in them for the present taste, our modern dialect is much more natural."

By this time the equipage of the strolling company was arrived at the village, which it seems had been apprised of our approach, and was come out to gaze at us; for my companion observed that strollers always have more spectators without doors than within. I did not consider the impropriety of my being in such company, till I saw a mob gather about me. I therefore took shelter, as fast as possible, in the first ale-house that offered, and being shown into the common room, was accosted by a very well-dressed gentleman, who demanded whether I was the real chaplain of the company, or whether it was only to be my masquerade character in the play. Upon my informing him of the truth, and that I did not belong in any sort to the company, he was condescending enough to desire me and the player to partake in a bowl of punch, over which he discussed modern politics with great earnestness and interest. I set him down in my own mind for nothing less than a parliament man at least; but was almost confirmed in my conjectures, when, upon asking what there was in the house for supper, he insisted that I and the player should sup with him at his house; with which request, after some entreaties, we were prevailed on to comply.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE DESCRIPTION OF A PERSON DISCONTENTED WITH THE PRESENT GOVERNMENT AND APPREHENSIVE OF THE LOSS OF OUR LIBERTIES.

THE house where we were to be entertained lying at a small distance from the village, our inviter observed, that as the coach was not ready, he would conduct us on foot; and we soon arrived at one of the most magnificent mansions I had seen in that part of the country. The apartment into which we were shown was perfectly elegant and modern; he went to give orders for supper, while the player, with a wink, observed that we were perfectly in luck. Our entertainer soon returned; an elegant supper was brought in; two or three ladies in easy dishabille were introduced, and the conversation began with some sprightliness. Politics, however, was the subject on which our entertainer chiefly expatiated; for he asserted that liberty was at once his boast and his terror. After the cloth was removed, he asked me if I had seen the last Monitor; to which replying in the negative, "What, not the Auditor, I suppose?" cried he. "Neither, sir," returned I. "That's strange, very strange," replied my entertainer. "Now I read all the politics that come out. The Daily, the Public, the Ledger, the Chronicle, the London Evening, the Whitehall Evening, the seventeen Magazines, and the two Reviews; and though they hate each other, I love them all. Liberty, sir, liberty is the Briton's boast, and by all my coal-mines in Cornwall, I reverence its guardians." — "Then it is to be hoped," cried I, "you reverence the king." — "Yes," returned my entertainer, "when he does what we would have him; but if he goes on as he has done of late, I'll never trouble myself more with his matters. I say nothing. I think, only, I could have directed some things better. I don't think there has been a sufficient number of advisers; he should advise with every person willing to give him advice, and then we should have things done in another guess manner." 5 10 15

"I wish," cried I, "that such intruding advisers were fixed in the pillory. It should be the duty of honest men to assist the weaker side of our constitution, that sacred power which has for some years been every day declining, and losing its due share of influence in the state. But these ignorants still continue the same cry of liberty; and if they have any weight, basely throw it into the subsiding scale." 20

"How," cried one of the ladies, "do I live to see one so base, so sordid, as to be an enemy to liberty, and a defender of tyrants? Liberty, that sacred gift of Heaven, that glorious privilege of Britons!"

"Can it be possible," cried our entertainer, "that there should be any found at present advocates for slavery? Any who are for meanly giving up the privileges of Britons? Can any, sir, be so abject?"

"No, sir," replied I, "I am for liberty, that attribute of God! Glorious liberty! that theme of modern declamation. I would have all men kings. I would be a king myself. We have all naturally an equal right to the throne; we are all originally equal. This is my opinion, and was once the opinion of a set of honest men who were called Levellers. They tried to erect themselves into a community where all should be equally free. But, alas! it would never answer; for there were some among them stronger, and some more cunning than others, and these became masters of the rest; for as sure as your groom rides your horses because he is a cunninger animal than they, so surely will the animal that is cunninger or stronger than he sit upon his shoulders in turn. Since then it is entailed upon humanity to submit, and some are born to command, and others to obey, the question is, as there must be tyrants, whether it is better to have them in the same house with us, or in the same village, or, still farther off, in the metropolis. Now, sir, for my own part, as I naturally hate the face of a tyrant, the farther off he is removed from me, the better pleased am I. The generality of mankind also are of my way of thinking, and have unanimously created one king, whose election at once diminishes the number of tyrants, and puts tyranny at the greatest distance from the greatest number of people. Now, the great, who were tyrants themselves before the election of one tyrant, are naturally averse to a power raised over them, and whose weight must ever lean heaviest on the subordinate orders. It is the interest of the great, therefore, to diminish kingly power as much as possible; because whatever they take 5 from that is naturally restored to themselves; and all they have to do in the state is to undermine the single tyrant, by which they resume their primeval authority. Now, the state may be so circumstanced, or its laws may be so disposed, or its men of opulence so minded, as all 10 to conspire in carrying on this business of undermining monarchy. For, in the first place, if the circumstances of our state be such as to favor the accumulation of wealth, and make the opulent still more rich, this will increase their ambition. An accumulation of wealth, 15 however, must necessarily be the consequence, when, as at present, more riches flow in from external commerce than arise from internal industry; for external commerce can only be managed to advantage by the rich, and they have also at the same time all the emoluments arising 20 from internal industry; so that the rich, with us, have two sources of wealth, whereas the poor have but one. For this reason, wealth, in all commercial states, is found to accumulate, and all such have hitherto in time become aristocratical. Again, the very laws also of this country 25 may contribute to the accumulation of wealth; as when, by their means, the natural ties that bind the rich and poor together are broken, and it is ordained that the rich shall only marry with the rich; or when the learned are held unqualified to serve their country as counsellors, merely from a defect of opulence, and wealth is thus made the object of a wise man's ambition; by these means, I say, and such means as these, riches will accumulate. Now the possessor of accumulated wealth, when furnished with the necessaries and pleasures of life, has no other method to employ the superfluity of his fortune but in purchasing power. That is, differently speaking, in making dependents, by purchasing the liberty of the needy or the venal, of men who are willing to bear the mortification of contiguous tyranny for bread. Thus each very opulent man generally gathers round him a circle of the people; and the polity abounding in accumulated wealth may be compared to a Cartesian system, each orb with a vortex of its own. Those, however, who are willing to move in a great man's vortex, are only such as must be slaves, the rabble of mankind, whose souls and whose education are adapted to servitude, and who know nothing of liberty except the name. But there must still be a large number of the people without the sphere of the opulent man's influence; namely, that order of men which subsist between the very rich and the very rabble; those men who are possessors of too large fortunes to submit to the neighboring man in power, and yet are too poor to set up for tyranny themselves. In this middle order of mankind are generally to be found all the arts, wisdom, and virtues of society. This order alone is known to be the true preserver of freedom, and may be called the people.

Now, it may happen that this middle order of mankind may lose all its influence in a state, and its voice be in a manner drowned in that of the rabble; for if the fortune sufficient for qualifying a person at present to give his voice in state affairs be ten times less than was judged 5 sufficient upon forming the Constitution, it is evident that greater numbers of the rabble will thus be introduced into the political system, and they, ever moving in the vortex of the great, will follow where greatness shall direct. In such a state, therefore, all that the middle order 10 has left, is to preserve the prerogative and privileges of the one principal governor with the most sacred circumspection. For he divides the power of the rich, and calls off the great from falling with tenfold weight on the middle order placed beneath them. The middle order 15 may be compared to a town, of which the opulent are forming the siege, and to which the governor from without is hastening the relief. While the besiegers are in dread of an enemy over them, it is but natural to offer the townsmen the most specious terms; to flatter them 20 with sounds, and amuse them with privileges: but if they once defeat the governor from behind, the walls of the town will be but a small defence to its inhabitants. What they may then expect may be seen by turning our eyes to Holland, Genoa, or Venice, where the laws 25 govern the poor, and the rich govern the laws. I am then for, and would die for monarchy, sacred monarchy; for if there be anything sacred amongst men, it must be the anointed SOVEREIGN of his people; and every diminution of his power, in war, or in peace, is an infringement upon the real liberties of the subject. The sounds of liberty, patriotism, and Britons, have already done much; it is to be hoped that the true sons of freedom

5 will prevent their ever doing more. I have known many of those pretended champions of liberty in my time, yet do I not remember one that was not in his heart and in his family a tyrant."

My warmth I found had lengthened this harangue
10 beyond the rules of good breeding; but the impatience of my entertainer, who often strove to interrupt it, could be restrained no longer. "What," cried he, "then I have been all this while entertaining a Jesuit in parson's clothes! but by all the coal-mines of Cornwall, out he 15 shall pack, if my name be Wilkinson." I now found that I had gone too far, and asked pardon for the warmth with which I had spoken. "Pardon!" returned he in a fury; "I think such principles demand ten thousand pardons. What? give up liberty, property, 20 and, as the Gazetteer says, lie down to be saddled with wooden shoes! Sir, I insist upon your marching out of this house immediately, to prevent worse consequences; sir, I insist upon it." I was going to repeat my remonstrances, but just then we heard a footman's rap at 25 the door, and the two ladies cried out, "As sure as death there is our master and mistress come home." It seems my entertainer was all this while only the butler, who, in his master's absence, had a mind to cut a figure, and be for a while the gentleman himself; and to say the truth, he talked politics as well as most country gentlemen do. But nothing could now exceed my confusion upon seeing the gentleman and his lady enter; nor was their surprise at finding such company and good cheer less than ours. "Gentlemen," cried the real master of 5 the house to me and my companion, "my wife and I are your most humble servants; but I protest this is so unexpected a favor, that we almost sink under the obligation." However unexpected our company might be to them, theirs I am sure was still more so to us, and I was 10 struck dumb with the apprehension of my own absurdity, when whom should I next see enter the room but my dear Miss Arabella Wilmot, who was formerly designed to be married to my son George, but whose match was broken off as already related. As soon as she saw me, 15 she flew to my arms with the utmost joy. "My dear sir," cried she, "to what happy accident is it that we owe so unexpected a visit? I am sure my uncle and aunt will be in raptures when they find they have the good Dr. Primrose for their guest." Upon hearing my 20 name, the old gentleman and lady very politely stepped up, and welcomed me with the most cordial hospitality. Nor could they forbear smiling, upon being informed of the nature of my present visit; but the unfortunate butler, whom they at first seemed disposed to turn away, 25 was at my intercession forgiven.

Mr. Arnold and his lady, to whom the house belonged, was insisted upon having the pleasure of my stay for some days; and as their niece, my charming pupil, whose mind in some measure had been formed under my own instructions, joined in their entreaties, I complied. That night I was shown to a magnificent chamber, and the next morning early Miss Wilmot desired to walk

5 with me in the garden, which was decorated in the modern manner. After some time spent in pointing out the beauties of the place, she inquired with seeming unconcern when last I had heard from my son George. "Alas! madam," cried I, "he has now been nearly three 10 years absent without ever writing to his friends or me. Where he is I know not; perhaps I shall never see him or happiness more. No, my dear madam, we shall never more see such pleasing hours as were once spent by our fireside at Wakefield. My little family are now dis-
15 persing very fast, and poverty has brought not only want, but infamy upon us." The good-natured girl let fall a tear at this account; but as I saw her possessed of too much sensibility, I forbore a more minute detail of our sufferings. It was, however, some consolation to 20 me, to find that time had made no alteration in her affections, and that she had rejected several offers that had been made her, since our leaving her part of the country. She led me round all the extensive improvements of the place, pointing to the several walks and arbors, and at 25 the same time catching from every object a hint for some new question relative to my son. In this manner we spent the forenoon, till the bell summoned us in to dinner, where we found the manager of the strolling company that I mentioned before, who was come to dispose of tickets for the "Fair Penitent," which was to be acted that evening, the part of Horatio by a young gentleman who had never appeared on any stage. He seemed to be very warm in the praises of the new performer, and averred that he never saw any who bid so fair for excellence. Acting, he observed, was not learned in a day; "but this gentleman," continued he, "seems born to tread the stage. His voice, his figure, and attitudes, are all admirable. We caught him up accidentally in our journey down." This account, in some measure, excited our curiosity, and, at the entreaty of the ladies, I was prevailed upon to accompany them to the play-house, which was no other than a barn. As the company with which I went was incontestibly the chief of the place, we were received with the greatest respect, and placed in the front seat of the theatre, where we sat for some time with no small impatience to see Horatio make his appearance. The new performer advanced at last; and let parents think of my sensations by their own, when I found it was my unfortunate son. He was going to begin, when, turning his eyes upon the audience, he perceived Miss Wilmot and me, and stood at once speechless and immovable. The actors behind the scene, who ascribed this pause to his natural timidity, attempted to encourage him; but instead of going on, he burst into a flood of tears, and retired off the stage. I don't know what were my feelings on this occasion, for they succeeded with too much rapidity for description; but I was soon awaked from this disagreeable reverie by Miss Wilmot, who, pale, and with a trembling voice, desired me to conduct her back to her uncle's. When got home, Mr. Arnold, who was as yet a stranger to our extraordinary behavior, being informed that the new performer was my son, sent his coach and an invitation for him; and as he persisted in his refusal to appear again upon the stage, the players put another in his place, and we soon had him with us. Mr. Arnold gave him the kindest reception, and I received him with my usual transport; for I could never counterfeit false resentment. Miss Wilmot's reception was mixed with seeming neglect, and yet I could perceive she acted a studied part. The tumult in her mind seemed not yet abated; she said twenty giddy things that looked like joy, and then laughed loud at her own want of meaning. At intervals she would take a sly peep at the glass, as if happy in the consciousness of irresistible beauty, and often would ask questions without giving any manner of attention to the answers.

CHAPTER XX.

THE HISTORY OF A PHILOSOPHIC VAGABOND, PURSUING NOVELTY, BUT LOSING CONTENT.

AFTER we had supped, Mrs. Arnold politely offered to send a couple of her footmen for my son's baggage, which he at first seemed to decline; but upon her pressing the request, he was obliged to inform her that a stick and wallet were all the movable things upon this 5 earth that he could boast of. "Why, ay, my son," cried I, "you left me but poor, and poor I find you are come back; and yet I make no doubt you have seen a great deal of the world." — "Yes, sir," replied my son, "but travelling after fortune is not the way to secure 10 her: and, indeed, of late I have desisted from the pursuit." — "I fancy, sir," cried Mrs. Arnold, "that the account of your adventures would be amusing; the first part of them I have often heard from my niece; but could the company prevail for the rest, it would be an 15 additional obligation." — "Madam," replied my son, "I promise you the pleasure you have in hearing will not be half so great as my vanity in repeating them; yet in the whole narrative I can scarcely promise you one adventure, as my account is rather of what I saw than 20 what I did. The first misfortune of my life, which you all know, was great; but though it distressed, it could not sink me. No person ever had a better knack at hoping than I. The less kind I found fortune at one time, the more I expected from her another; and being 5 now at the bottom of her wheel, every new revolution might lift, but could not depress me. I proceeded, therefore, towards London in a fine morning, no way uneasy about to-morrow, but cheerful as the birds that carolled by the road, and comforted myself with reflect-

10 ing that London was the mart where abilities of every kind were sure of meeting distinction and reward.

“ Upon my arrival in town, sir, my first care was to deliver your letter of recommendation to our cousin, who was himself in little better circumstances than I.
15 My first scheme, you know, sir, was to be usher at an academy, and I asked his advice on the affair. Our cousin received the proposal with a true Sardonic grin. ‘ Ay,’ cried he, ‘ this is indeed a very pretty career that has been chalked out for you. I have been an usher at 20 a boarding-school myself; and may I die by an anodyne necklace, but I had rather be an under-turnkey in Newgate. I was up early and late; I was browbeat by the master, hated for my ugly face by the mistress, worried by the boys within, and never permitted to stir out to 25 meet civility abroad. But are you sure you are fit for a school? Let me examine you a little. Have you been bred an apprentice to the business? No. Then you won’t do for a school. Can you dress the boys’ hair? No. Then you won’t do for a school. Have you had the small-pox? No. Then you won't do for a school. Can you lie three in a bed? No. Then you will never do for a school. Have you got a good stomach? Yes. Then you will by no means do for a school. No, sir, if you are for a genteel, easy profession, 5 bind yourself seven years an apprentice to turn a cutler's wheel, but avoid a school by any means. Yet come,' continued he, 'I see you are a lad of spirit and some learning, what do you think of commencing author, like me? You have read in books, no doubt, of men of 10 genius starving at the trade. At present I'll show you forty very dull fellows about town that live by it in opulence; all honest jog-trot men, who go on smoothly and dully, and write history and politics, and are praised: men, sir, who, had they been bred cobblers, would all 15 their lives have only mended shoes, but never made them.'

"Finding that there was no great degree of gentility affixed to the character of an usher, I resolved to accept his proposals; and having the highest respect for literature, hailed the antiqua mater of Grub-street with reverence. I thought it my glory to pursue a track which Dryden and Otway trod before me. I considered the goddess of this region as the parent of excellence; and however an intercourse with the world might give us 25 good sense, the poverty she entailed I supposed to be the nurse of genius. Big with these reflections, I sat down, and finding that the best things remained to be said on the wrong side, I resolved to write a book that should be wholly new. I therefore drest up three paradoxes with some ingenuity. They were false, indeed, but they were new. The jewels of truth have been so often imported by others, that nothing was left for me

5 to import but some splendid things that at a distance looked every bit as well. Witness, ye powers, what fancied importance sat perched upon my quill while I was writing! The whole learned world, I made no doubt, would rise to oppose my systems; but then I was pre-10 pared to oppose the whole learned world. Like the porcupine, I sat self-collected, with a quill pointed against every opposer."

"Well said, my boy," cried I; "and what subject did you treat upon? I hope you did not pass over the 15 importance of monogamy. But I interrupt; go on: you published your paradoxes; well, and what did the learned world say to your paradoxes?"

"Sir," replied my son, "the learned world said nothing to my paradoxes; nothing at all, sir. Every man of 20 them was employed in praising his friends and himself, or condemning his enemies; and unfortunately, as I had neither, I suffered the cruellest mortification, — neglect.

"As I was meditating one day in a coffee-house on the fate of my paradoxes, a little man, happening to 25 enter the room, placed himself in the box before me, and after some preliminary discourse, finding me to be a scholar, drew out a bundle of proposals, begging me to subscribe to a new edition he was going to give to the world of Propertius with notes. This demand necessarily produced a reply that I had no money; and that concession led him to inquire into the nature of my expectations. Finding that my expectations were just as great as my purse, 'I see,' cried he, 'you are unacquainted with the town; I'll teach you a part of 5 it. Look at these proposals, — upon these very proposals I have subsisted very comfortably for twelve years. The moment a nobleman returns from his travels, a Creolian arrives from Jamaica, or a dowager from her country-seat, I strike for a subscription. I first besiege their hearts with flattery, and then pour in my proposals at the breach. If they subscribe readily the first time, I renew my request to beg a dedication fee. If they let me have that, I smite them once more for engraving their coat-of-arms at the top. Thus,' continued he, 'I live by vanity, and laugh at it. But between ourselves, I am now too well known; I should be glad to borrow your face a bit: a nobleman of distinction has just returned from Italy; my face is familiar to his porter; but if you bring this copy of 20 verses, my life for it you succeed, and we divide the spoil.'"

"Bless us, George," cried I, "and is this the employment of poets now! Do men of their exalted talents thus stoop to beggary! Can they so far disgrace their calling as to make a vile traffic of praise for bread?"

"Oh, no, sir," returned he, "a true poet can never be so base; for wherever there is genius, there is pride. The creatures I now describe are only beggars in rhyme.

The real poet, as he braves every hardship for fame, so he is equally a coward to contempt; and none but those who are unworthy protection condescend to solicit it.

“Having a mind too proud to stoop to such indignities, and yet a fortune too humble to hazard a second attempt for fame, I was now obliged to take a middle course, and write for bread. But I was unqualified for a profession where mere industry alone was to insure success. I could not suppress my lurking passion for 10 applause; but usually consumed that time in efforts after excellence which takes up but little room, when it should have been more advantageously employed in the diffusive productions of fruitful mediocrity. My little piece would therefore come forth in the midst of periodical publications, unnoticed and unknown. The public
15 were more importantly employed than to observe the easy simplicity of my style, or the harmony of my periods. Sheet after sheet was thrown off to oblivion. My essays were buried among the essays upon liberty, 20 Eastern tales, and cures for the bite of a mad dog, while Philautos, Philalethes, Philelutheros, and Philanthropos all wrote better, because they wrote faster than I.

“Now, therefore, I began to associate with none but disappointed authors like myself, who praised, deplored, 25 and despised each other. The satisfaction we found in every celebrated writer’s attempts was inversely as their merits. I found that no genius in another could please me. My unfortunate paradoxes had entirely dried up that source of comfort. I could neither read nor write with satisfaction; for excellence in another was my aversion, and writing was my trade.

“In the midst of these gloomy reflections, as I was one day sitting on a bench in St. James’s Park, a young gentleman of distinction, who had been my intimate 5 acquaintance at the university, approached me. We saluted each other with some hesitation; he almost ashamed of being known to one who made so shabby an appearance, and I afraid of a repulse. But my suspicions soon vanished; for Ned Thornhill was at the 10 bottom a very good-natured fellow.”

“What did you say, George?” interrupted I. “Thornhill? was not that his name? It can certainly be no other than my landlord.” — “Bless me,” cried Mrs. Arnold, “is Mr. Thornhill so near a neighbor of yours? 15 He has long been a friend to our family, and we expect a visit from him shortly.”

“My friend’s first care,” continued my son, “was to alter my appearance by a very fine suit of his own clothes, and then I was admitted to his table, upon the 20 footing of half friend, half underling. My business was to attend him at auctions, to put him in spirits when he sat for his picture, to take the left hand in his chariot when not filled by another, and to assist at tattering a kip, as the phrase was, when he had a mind for a frolic. 25 Besides this, I had twenty other little employments in the family. I was to do many small things without bidding: to carry the corkscrew; to stand godfather to all the butler’s children; to sing when I was bid; to be never out of humor; always to be humble, and, if I could, to be very happy.

“In this honorable post, however, I was not without a rival. A captain of marines, who was formed for the
5 place by nature, opposed me in my patron’s affections. His mother had been laundress to a man of quality, and thus he early acquired a taste for pimping and pedigree. As this gentleman made it the study of his life to be acquainted with lords, though he was dismissed
10 from several for his stupidity, yet he found many of them who were as dull as himself that permitted his assiduities. As flattery was his trade, he practised it with the easiest address imaginable; but it came awkward and stiff from me, and as every day my patron’s
15 desire of flattery increased, so every hour being better acquainted with his defects I became more unwilling to give it. Thus I was once more fairly going to give up the field to the captain, when my friend found occasion for my assistance. This was nothing less than to fight
20 a duel for him with a gentleman whose sister it was pretended he had used ill. I readily complied with his request, and though I see you are displeased with my conduct, yet, as it was a debt indispensably due to friendship, I could not refuse. I undertook the affair, 25 disarmed my antagonist, and soon after had the pleasure of finding that the lady was only a woman of the town, and the fellow her bully and a sharper. This piece of service was repaid with the warmest professions of gratitude; but as my friend was to leave town in a few days, he knew no other method of serving me, but by recommending me to his uncle, Sir William Thornhill, and another nobleman of great distinction who enjoyed a post under the government. When he was gone, my first care was to carry his recommenda- 5 tory letter to his uncle, a man whose character for every virtue was universal, yet just. I was received by his servants with the most hospitable smiles; for the looks of the domestic ever transmit their master's benevolence. Being shown into a grand apartment, where Sir 10 William soon came to me, I delivered my message and letter, which he read, and after pausing some minutes, 'Pray, sir,' cried he, 'inform me what you have done for my kinsman to deserve this warm recommendation. But I suppose, sir, I guess your merits; you have fought 15 for him; and so you would expect a reward from me for being the instrument of his vices. I wish, sincerely wish, that my present refusal may be some punishment for your guilt; but still more, that it may be some inducement to your repentance.' The severity of this 20 rebuke I bore patiently, because I knew it was just. My whole expectations now, therefore, lay in my letter to the great man. As the doors of the nobility are almost ever beset with beggars, all ready to thrust in some sly petition, I found it no easy matter to gain ad- 25 mittance. However, after bribing the servants with half my worldly fortune, I was at last shown into a spacious apartment, my letter being previously sent up for his lordship's inspection. During this anxious interval

I had full time to look around me. Everything was grand and of happy contrivance; the paintings, the furniture, the gildings, petrified me with awe, and raised my idea of the owner. Ah, thought I to myself, how 5 very great must the possessor of all these things be, who carries in his head the business of the state, and whose house displays half the wealth of a kingdom; sure his genius must be unfathomable! During these awful reflections, I heard a step come heavily forward.
10 Ah, this is the great man himself! No, it was only a chambermaid. Another foot was heard soon after. This must be he! No, it was only the great man's valet de chambre. At last his lordship actually made his appearance. 'Are you,' cried he, 'the bearer of this here
15 letter?' I answered with a bow. 'I learn by this,' continued he, 'as how that'— But just at that instant a servant delivered him a card, and without taking further notice, he went out of the room, and left me to digest my own happiness at leisure; I saw no more of 20 him till told by a footman that his lordship was going to his coach at the door. Down I immediately followed, and joined my voice to that of three or four more, who came, like me, to petition for favors. His lordship, however, went too fast for us, and was gaining 25 his chariot door with large strides, when I hallooed out to know if I was to have any reply. He was by this time got in, and muttered an answer, half of which only I heard, the other half was lost in the rattling of his chariot wheels. I stood for some time with my neck stretched out in the posture of one that was listening to catch the glorious sounds, till looking round me, I found myself alone at his lordship's gate.

"My patience," continued my son, "was now quite exhausted. Stung with the thousand indignities I had met with, I was willing to cast myself away, and only wanted the gulf to receive me. I regarded myself as one of those vile things that nature designed should be thrown by into her lumber-room, there to perish in obscurity. I had still, however, half a guinea left, and of that I thought fortune herself should not deprive me; but in order to be sure of this I was resolved to go instantly and spend it, while I had it, and then trust to occurrences for the rest. As I was going along with this resolution, it happened that Mr. Crispe's office seemed invitingly open to give me a welcome reception. In this office Mr. Crispe kindly offers all his Majesty's subjects a generous promise of £30 a year, for which promise all they give in return is their liberty for life, and permission to let him transport them to America as slaves. I was happy at finding a place where I could lose my fears in desperation, and entered this cell (for it had the appearance of one) with the devotion of a monastic. Here I found a number of poor creatures, all in circumstances like myself, expecting the arrival of Mr. Crispe, presenting a true epitome of English impatience. Each untractable soul at variance with fortune wreaked her injuries on their own hearts: but Mr. Crispe at last came down, and all our murmurs where hushed. He deigned to regard me with an air of peculiar approbation, and indeed he was the first man who for a month past had talked to me with smiles. After a few questions, he found I was fit for 5 everything in the world. He paused a while upon the properest means of providing for me, and slapping his forehead as if he had found it, assured me that there was at that time an embassy talked of from the synod of Pennsylvania to the Chickasaw Indians, and that he

10 would use his interest to get me made secretary. I knew in my own heart that the fellow lied, and yet his promise gave me pleasure, there was something so magnificent in the sound. I fairly therefore divided my half-guinea, one half of which went to be added to his 15 thirty thousand pounds, and with the other half I resolved to go to the next tavern, to be there more happy than he.

“As I was going out with that resolution, I was met at the door by the captain of a ship with whom I had 20 formerly some little acquaintance, and he agreed to be my companion over a bowl of punch. As I never chose to make a secret of my circumstances, he assured me that I was upon the very point of ruin, in listening to the office-keeper’s promises ; for that he only designed to 25 sell me to the plantations. ‘But,’ continued he, ‘I fancy you might, by a much shorter voyage, be very easily put into a genteel way of bread. Take my advice. My ship sails to-morrow for Amsterdam. What if you go in her as a passenger ? The moment you land, all you have to do is to teach the Dutchmen English, and I'll warrant you'll get pupils and money enough. I suppose you understand English,' added he, 'by this time, or the deuce is in it.' I confidently assured him of that, but expressed a doubt whether the Dutch would be willing 5 to learn English. He affirmed with an oath that they would be fond of it to distraction; and upon that affirmation I agreed with his proposal, and embarked the next day to teach the Dutch English in Holland. The wind was fair, our voyage short, and, after having paid my 10 passage with half my movables, I found myself, fallen as from the skies, a stranger in one of the principal streets of Amsterdam. In this situation I was unwilling to let any time pass unemployed in teaching. I addressed myself therefore to two or three of those I met, 15 whose appearance seemed most promising; but it was impossible to make ourselves mutually understood. It was not till this very moment I recollected that in order to teach the Dutchmen English, it was necessary that they should first teach me Dutch. How I came to 20 overlook so obvious an objection is to me amazing; but certain it is I overlooked it.

"This scheme thus blown up, I had some thoughts of fairly shipping back to England again; but falling into company with an Irish student who was returning from 25 Louvain, our conversation turning upon topics of literature (for, by the way, it may be observed that I always forgot the meanness of my circumstances when I could converse upon such subjects), from him I learned that there were not two men in his whole university who understood Greek. This amazed me. I instantly resolved to travel to Louvain, and there live by teaching Greek; and in this design I was heartened by my 5 brother student, who threw out some hints that a fortune might be got by it.

“I set boldly forward the next morning. Every day lessened the burden of my movables, like Æsop and his basket of bread; for I paid them for my lodgings to the 10 Dutch as I travelled on. When I came to Louvain I was resolved not to go sneaking to the lower professors, but openly tendered my talents to the principal himself. I went, had admittance, and offered him my service as a master of the Greek language, which I had been told 15 was a desideratum in his university. The principal seemed at first to doubt of my abilities; but of these I offered to convince him by turning a part of any Greek author he should fix upon into Latin. Finding me perfectly earnest in my proposal, he addressed me thus:
20 ‘You see me, young man; I never learned Greek, and I don’t find that I have ever missed it. I have had a doctor’s cap and gown without Greek; I have ten thousand florins a year without Greek; I eat heartily without Greek; and, in short,’ continued he, ‘as I don’t know
25 Greek, I do not believe there is any good in it.’

“I was now too far from home to think of returning; so I resolved to go forward. I had some knowledge of music, with a tolerable voice, and now turned what was my amusement into a present means of subsistence. I passed among the harmless peasants of Flanders, and among such of the French as were poor enough to be very merry ; for I ever found them sprightly in proportion to their wants. Whenever I approached a peasant's house towards nightfall, I played one of my most merry 5 tunes, and that procured me not only a lodging, but subsistence for the next day. I once or twice attempted to play for people of fashion ; but they always thought my performance odious, and never rewarded me even with a trifle. This was to me the more extraordinary, as when- 10 ever I used in better days to play for company, when playing was my amusement, my music never failed to throw them into raptures, and the ladies especially ; but as it was now my only means, it was received with contempt, — a proof how ready the world is to underrate 15 those talents by which a man is supported.

“In this manner I proceeded to Paris, with no design but just to look about me, and then to go forward. The people of Paris are much fonder of strangers that have money than those that have wit. As I could not 20 boast much of either, I was no great favorite. After walking about the town four or five days, and seeing the outsides of the best houses, I was preparing to leave this retreat of venal hospitality, when passing through one of the principal streets, whom should I 25 meet but our cousin, to whom you first recommended me. This meeting was very agreeable to me, and I believe not displeasing to him. He inquired into the nature of my journey to Paris, and informed me of his own business there, which was to collect pictures, medals, intaglios, and antiques of all kinds for a gentleman in London, who had just stepped into taste and a large fortune. I was the more surprised at seeing our cousin 5 pitched upon for this office, as he himself had often assured me he knew nothing of the matter. Upon asking how he had been taught the art of a cognoscento so very suddenly, he assured me that nothing was more easy. The whole secret consisted in a strict adherence to two 10 rules: the one, always to observe the picture might have been better if the painter had taken more pains; and the other, to praise the works of Pietro Perugino. 'But,' says he, 'as I once taught you how to be an author in London, I'll now undertake to instruct you in 15 the art of picture-buying at Paris.'

"With this proposal I very readily closed, as it was living, and now all my ambition was to live. I went therefore to his lodgings, improved my dress by his assistance, and after some time accompanied him to 20 auctions of pictures, where the English gentry were expected to be purchasers. I was not a little surprised at his intimacy with people of the best fashion, who referred themselves to his taste or judgment upon every picture or medal, as to an unerring standard of taste.
25 He made very good use of my assistance upon these occasions; for when asked his opinion, he would gravely take me aside and ask mine, shrug, look wise, return, and assure the company that he could give no opinion upon an affair of so much importance. Yet there was sometimes an occasion for a more important assurance. I remember to have seen him, after giving his opinion that the coloring of a picture was not mellow enough, very deliberately take a brush with brown varnish, that was accidentally lying by, and rub it over the piece 5 with great composure before all the company, and then ask if he had not improved the tint.

“ When he had finished his commission in Paris, he left me strongly recommended to several men of distinction as a person very proper for a travelling tutor ; 10 and after some time I was employed in that capacity by a gentleman who brought his ward to Paris, in order to set him forward on his tour through Europe. I was to be the young gentleman’s governor, but with a proviso that he should always be permitted to govern himself. 15 My pupil, in fact, understood the art of guiding in money concerns much better than I. He was heir to a fortune of about two hundred thousand pounds, left him by an uncle in the West Indies ; and his guardians, to qualify him for the management of it, had bound him an ap- 20 prentice to an attorney. Thus avarice was his prevailing passion : all his questions on the road were how money might be saved ; which was the least expensive course of travel ; whether anything could be bought that would turn to account when disposed of again in 25 London. Such curiosities on the way as could be seen for nothing he was ready enough to look at ; but if the sight of them was to be paid for, he usually asserted that he had been told they were not worth seeing. He never paid a bill that he would not observe how amazingly expensive travelling was, and all this though he was not yet twenty-one. When arrived at Leghorn, as we took a walk to look at the port and shipping, he inquired the expense of the passage by sea home to England. This he was informed was but a trifle compared to his returning by land; he was therefore unable to withstand the temptation; so paying me the small part of my salary that was due, he took leave, and embarked with only one attendant for London.

“I now therefore was left once more upon the world at large; but then it was a thing I was used to. However, my skill in music could avail me nothing in a country where every peasant was a better musician than I; but by this time I had acquired another talent which answered my purpose as well, and this was a skill in disputation. In all the foreign universities and convents there are, upon certain days, philosophical theses maintained against every adventitious disputant; for which, if the champion opposes with any dexterity, he can claim a gratuity in money, a dinner, and a bed for one night. In this manner, therefore, I fought my way towards England, walked along from city to city, examined mankind more nearly, and, if I may so express it, saw both sides of the picture. My remarks, however, are but few: I found that monarchy was the best government for the poor to live in, and commonwealths for the rich. I found that riches in general were in every country another name for freedom; and that no man is so fond of liberty himself, as not to be desirous of subjecting the will of some individuals in society to his own.

“Upon my arrival in England I resolved to pay my respects first to you, and then to enlist as a volunteer 5 in the first expedition that was going forward; but on my journey down my resolutions were changed by meeting an old acquaintance, who I found belonged to a company of comedians that were going to make a summer campaign in the country. The company seemed 10 not much to disapprove of me for an associate. They all, however, apprised me of the importance of the task at which I aimed; that the public was a many-headed monster, and that only such as had very good heads could please it; that acting was not to be learned in 15 a day, and that without some traditional shrugs, which had been on the stage, and only on the stage, these hundred years, I could never pretend to please. The next difficulty was in fitting me with parts, as almost every character was in keeping. I was driven for some time 20 from one character to another, till at last Horatio was fixed upon, which the presence of the present company has happily hindered me from acting.”

CHAPTER XXI.

THE SHORT CONTINUANCE OF FRIENDSHIP AMONG THE VICIOUS, WHICH IS COEVAL ONLY WITH MUTUAL SATISFACTION.

MY son's account was too long to be delivered at once; the first part of it was begun that night, and he was concluding the rest after dinner the next day, when the appearance of Mr. Thornhill's equipage at the door
5 seemed to make a pause in the general satisfaction. The butler, who was now become my friend in the family, informed me, with a whisper, that the Squire had already made some overtures to Miss Wilmot, and that her aunt and uncle seemed highly to approve the 10 match. Upon Mr. Thornhill's entering, he seemed, at seeing my son and me, to start back; but I readily imputed that to surprise, and not displeasure. However, upon our advancing to salute him, he returned our greeting with the most apparent candor; and after a 15 short time his presence served only to increase the general good humor.

After tea he called me aside to inquire after my daughter; but upon my informing him that my inquiry was unsuccessful, he seemed greatly surprised, adding to comfort the rest of my family, whom he left perfectly well. He then asked if I had communicated her misfortune to Miss Wilmot or my son; and upon my replying that I had not told them as yet, he greatly approved my prudence and precaution, desiring me by all means to keep it a secret. "For at best," cried he, "it is but divulging one's infamy; and perhaps Miss Livy may not be so guilty as we all imagine." We were interrupted by a servant, who came to ask the Squire in, to stand up at country dances; so that he left me quite pleased with the interest he seemed to take in my concerns. His addresses, however, to Miss Wilmot were too obvious to be mistaken; and yet she seemed not perfectly pleased, but bore them rather in compliance to the will of her aunt than real inclination. I had even the satisfaction to see her lavish some kind looks upon my unfortunate son, which the other could neither extort by his fortune nor assiduity. Mr. Thornhill's seeming composure, however, not a little surprised me. We had now continued here a week at the pressing instances of Mr. Arnold; but each day the more tenderness Miss Wilmot showed my son, Mr. Thornhill's friendship seemed proportionably to increase for him.
20 that he had been since frequently at my house in order

He had formerly made us the most kind assurance of using his interest to serve the family; but now his generosity was not confined to promises alone. The morning I designed for my departure, Mr. Thornhill came to me with looks of real pleasure, to inform me of a piece of service he had done for his friend George. This was nothing less than his having procured him an ensign's commission in one of the regiments that was going to the West Indies, for which he had promised but one hundred pounds, his interest having been sufficient to 5 get an abatement of the other two. "As for this trifling piece of service," continued the young gentleman, "I desire no other reward but the pleasure of having served my friend ; and as for the hundred pounds to be paid, if you are unable to raise it yourselves, I will ad-

10 vance it, and you shall repay me at your leisure." This was a favor we wanted words to express our sense of ; I readily therefore gave my bond for the money, and testified as much gratitude as if I never intended to pay.

George was to depart for town the next day to secure 15 his commission, in pursuance of his generous patron's directions, who judged it highly expedient to use despatch, least in the meantime another should step in with more advantageous proposals. The next morning, therefore, our young soldier was early prepared for his 20 departure, and seemed the only person among us that was not affected by it. Neither the fatigues and dangers he was going to encounter, nor the friends and mistress — for Miss Wilmot actually loved him — he was leaving behind, any way damped his spirits. After he 25 had taken leave of the rest of the company, I gave him all I had, — my blessing. "And now, my boy," cried I, "thou art going to fight for thy country ; remember how thy brave grandfather fought for his sacred king, when loyalty among Britons was a virtue. Go, my boy, and imitate him in all but his misfortunes, if it was a misfortune to die with Lord Falkland. Go, my boy, and if you fall, though distant, exposed, and unwept by those that love you, the most precious tears are those with which heaven bedews the unburied head of a soldier." 5

The next morning I took leave of the good family that had been kind enough to entertain me so long, not without several expressions of gratitude to Mr. Thornhill for his late bounty. I left them in the enjoyment of all that happiness which affluence and good-breeding 10 procure, and returned towards home, despairing of ever finding my daughter more, but sending a sigh to heaven to spare and forgive her. I was now come within about twenty miles of home, having hired a horse to carry me, as I was yet but weak, and comforted myself with the 15 hopes of soon seeing all I held dearest upon earth. But the night coming on, I put up at a little public-house by the roadside, and asked for the landlord's company over a pint of wine. We sat beside his kitchen fire, which was the best room in the house, and chatted on politics 20 and the news of the country. We happened, among other topics, to talk of young Squire Thornhill, who, the host assured me, was hated as much as his uncle, Sir William, who sometimes came down to the country, was loved. He went on to observe that he made it his 25 whole study to betray the daughters of such as received him to their houses, and after a fortnight or three weeks' possession, turned them out unrewarded and abandoned to the world. As we continued our discourse in this manner, his wife, who had been out to get change, returned, and perceiving that her husband was enjoying a pleasure in which she was not a sharer, she asked him in an angry tone what he did there, to which he only 5 replied in an ironical way by drinking her health. "Mr. Symmonds," cried she, "you use me very ill, and I'll bear it no longer. Here three parts of the business is left for me to do, and the fourth left unfinished, while you do nothing but soak with the guests all day

10 long; whereas, if a spoonful of liquor were to cure me of a fever, I never touch a drop." I now found what she would be at, and immediately poured her out a glass, which she received with a courtesy, and drinking towards my good health, "Sir," resumed she, "it is not
15 so much for the value of the liquor I am angry, but one cannot help it when the house is going out of the windows. If the customers or guests are to be dunned, all the burden lies upon my back; he'd as lief eat that glass as budge after them himself. There, now, above
20 stairs we have a young woman who has come to take up her lodgings here, and I don't believe she has got any money, by her over civility. I am certain she is very slow of payment, and I wish she were put in mind of it." — "What signifies minding her," cried the host; "if 25 she be slow, she is sure." — "I don't know that," replied the wife; "but I know that I am sure she has been here a fortnight, and we have not yet seen the cross of her money." — "I suppose, my dear," cried he, "we shall have it all in a lump." — "In a lump!" cried the other; "I hope we may get it any way; and that I am resolved we will this very night, or out she tramps, bag and baggage." — "Consider, my dear," cried the husband, "she is a gentlewoman, and deserves more respect." — "As for the matter of that," returned the 5 hostess, "gentle or simple, out she shall pack with a sassarara. Gentry may be good things where they take; but for my part, I never saw much good of them at the sign of the Harrow." Thus saying, she ran up a narrow flight of stairs that went from the kitchen to a 10 room overhead; and I soon perceived, by the loudness of her voice, and the bitterness of her reproaches, that no money was to be had from her lodger. I could hear her remonstrances very distinctly: "Out I say; pack out this moment! Tramp, thou infamous strumpet, or 15 I'll give thee a mark thou won't be the better for this three months. What, you trumpery, to come and take up an honest house without cross or coin to bless yourself with; come along I say." — "O dear madam," cried the stranger, "pity me, pity a poor abandoned crea- 20 ture for one night, and death will soon do the rest." I instantly knew the voice of my poor ruined child Olivia. I flew to her rescue, while the woman was dragging her along by the hair, and I caught the dear forlorn wretch in my arms. "Welcome, any way welcome, my dearest 25 lost one, my treasure, to your poor old father's bosom! Though the vicious forsake thee, there is yet one in the world that will never forsake thee; though thou hadst ten thousand crimes to answer for, he will forget them all." — "O my own dear," — for minutes she could say no more, — "my own dearest good papa! Could angels be kinder? How do I deserve so much! The villain! I hate him and myself, to be a reproach to such 5 goodness. You can't forgive me; I know you cannot." — "Yes, my child, from my heart I do forgive thee! Only repent, and we both shall yet be happy. We shall see many pleasant days yet, my Olivia!" — "Ah, never, sir, never! The rest of my wretched life must 10 be infamy abroad, and shame at home. But, alas! papa, you look paler than you used to do. Could such a thing as I am give you so much uneasiness? Surely you have too much wisdom to take the miseries of my guilt upon yourself." — "Our wisdom, young woman,"

15 replied I — "Ah, why so cold a name, papa?" cried she. "This is the first time you ever called me by so cold a name." — "I ask pardon, my darling," returned I; "but I was going to observe that wisdom makes but a slow defence against trouble, though at last a 20 sure one." The landlady now returned to know if we did not choose a more genteel apartment; to which assenting, we were shown a room where we could converse more freely. After we had talked ourselves into some degree of tranquillity, I could not avoid desiring 25 some account of the gradations that led to her present wretched situation. "That villain, sir," said she, "from the first day of our meeting made me honorable though private proposals."

"Villain, indeed!" cried I; "and yet it in some measure surprises me how a person of Mr. Burchell's good sense and seeming honor could be guilty of such deliberate baseness, and thus step into a family to undo it."

"My dear papa," returned my daughter, "you labor 5 under a strange mistake. Mr. Burchell never attempted to deceive me; instead of that, he took every opportunity of privately admonishing me against the artifices of Mr. Thornhill, who I now find was even worse than he represented him." — "Mr. Thornhill," interrupted I; 10 "can it be?" — "Yes, sir," returned she; "it was Mr. Thornhill who seduced me, who employed the two ladies, as he called them, but who in fact were abandoned women of the town, without breeding or pity, to decoy us up to London. Their artifices, you may 15 remember, would have certainly succeeded but for Mr. Burchell's letter, who directed those reproaches at them which we all applied to ourselves. How he came to have so much influence as to defeat their intentions still remains a secret to me; but I am convinced he was 20 ever our warmest, sincerest friend."

"You amaze me, my dear," cried I; "but now I find my first suspicions of Mr. Thornhill's baseness were too well grounded; but he can triumph in security, for he is rich, and we are poor. But tell me, my child, sure 25 it was no small temptation that could thus obliterate all the impressions of such an education and so virtuous a disposition as thine?"

"Indeed, sir," replied she, "he owes all his triumph to the desire I had of making him, and not myself, happy. I knew that the ceremony of our marriage, which was privately performed by a popish priest, was no way binding, and that I had nothing to trust to 5 but his honor." — "What!" interrupted I, "and were you indeed married by a priest, and in orders?" — "Indeed, sir, we were," replied she, "though we were both sworn to conceal his name." — "Why, then, my child, come to my arms again; and now you are a thousand 10 times more welcome than before, for you are now his wife to all intents and purposes; nor can all the laws of man, though written upon tables of adamant, lessen the force of that sacred connection."

"Alas, papa!" replied she, "you are but little acquainted with his villainies; he has been married already by the same priest to six or eight wives more, whom, like me, he has deceived and abandoned."

"Has he so?" cried I; "then we must hang the priest, and you shall inform against him to-morrow." — "But,
20 sir," returned she, "will that be right, when I am sworn to secrecy?" — "My dear," I replied, "if you have made such a promise, I cannot, nor will I tempt you to break it. Even though it may benefit the public, you must not inform against him. In all human institutions a 25 smaller evil is allowed to procure a greater good; as, in politics, a province may be given to secure a kingdom; in medicine, a limb may be lopt off to preserve the body; but in religion, the law is written and inflexible, never to do evil. And this law, my child, is right; for otherwise, if we commit a smaller evil to procure a greater good, certain guilt would be thus incurred, in expectation of contingent advantage. And though the advantage should certainly follow, yet the interval between commission and advantage, which is allowed to be guilty, 5 may be that in which we are called away to answer for the things we have done, and the volume of human actions is closed forever. But I interrupt you, my dear; go on."

"The very next morning," continued she, "I found 10 what little expectation I was to have from his sincerity. That very morning he introduced me to two unhappy women more, whom, like me, he had deceived, but who lived in contented prostitution. I loved him too tenderly to bear such rivals in his affections, and strove to 15 forget my infamy in a tumult of pleasures. With this view I danced, dressed, and talked; but still was unhappy. The gentlemen who visited there told me every moment of the power of my charms, and this only contributed to increase my melancholy, as I had thrown all 20 their power quite away. Thus each day I grew more pensive, and he more insolent, till at last the monster had the assurance to offer me to a young baronet of his acquaintance. Need I describe, sir, how his ingratitude stung me? My answer to this proposal was almost 25 madness. I desired to part. As I was going, he offered me a purse; but I flung it at him with indignation, and burst from him in a rage, that for a while kept me insensible of the miseries of my situation. But I soon looked round me, and saw myself, a vile, abject, guilty thing, without one friend in the world to apply to. Just in that interval a stage-coach happening to pass by, I took a place, it being my only aim to be driven at a distance from a wretch I despised and detested. I was set 5 down here, where, since my arrival, my own anxiety and this woman's unkindness have been my only companions. The hours of pleasure that I have passed with my mamma and sister now grow painful to me. Their 10 sorrows are much; but mine are greater than theirs, for mine are mixed with guilt and infamy."

"Have patience, my child," cried I, "and I hope things will yet be better. Take some repose to-night, and to-morrow I'll carry you home to your mother and 15 the rest of the family, from whom you will receive a kind reception. Poor woman! this has gone to her heart; but she loves you still, Olivia, and will forget it."

CHAPTER XXII.

OFFENCES ARE EASILY PARDONED WHERE THERE IS LOVE AT BOTTOM.

THE next morning I took my daughter behind me, and set out on my return home. As we travelled along, I strove by every persuasion to calm her sorrows and fears, and to arm her with resolution to bear the presence of her offended mother. I took every opportunity, 5 from the prospect of a fine country, through which we passed, to observe how much kinder Heaven was to us than we are to each other, and that the misfortunes of nature's making were very few. I assured her that she should never perceive any change in my affections, and 10 that during my life, which yet might be long, she might depend upon a guardian and instructor. I armed her against the censures of the world, showed her that books were sweet, unrepublishing companions to the miserable, and that if they could not bring us to enjoy 15 life, they would at least teach us to endure it.

The hired horse that we rode was to be put up that night at an inn by the way, within about five miles from my house; and as I was willing to prepare my family for my daughter's reception, I determined to leave her 20 that night at the inn, and to return for her, accompanied by my daughter Sophia, early the next morning. It was night before we reached our appointed stage; however, after seeing her provided with a decent apartment, and having ordered the hostess to prepare proper refresh-

5 ments, I kissed her, and proceeded towards home. And now my heart caught new sensations of pleasure the nearer I approached that peaceful mansion. As a bird that had been frightened from its nest, my affections outwent my haste, and hovered round my little fireside
10 with all the rapture of expectation. I called up the many fond things I had to say, and anticipated the welcome I was to receive. I already felt my wife's tender embrace, and smiled at the joy of my little ones. As I walked but slowly, the night waned apace. The labor-
15 ers of the day were all retired to rest; the lights were out in every cottage; no sounds were heard but of the shrilling cock, and the deep-mouthed watchdog at hollow distance. I approached my little abode of pleasure, and before I was within a furlong of the place, our hon-20 est mastiff came running to welcome me.

It was now near midnight that I came to knock at my door: all was still and silent; my heart dilated with unutterable happiness, when, to my amazement, I saw the house bursting out in a blaze of fire, and every aper-25 ture red with conflagration! I gave a loud, convulsive outcry, and fell upon the pavement insensible. This alarmed my son, who had till this been asleep, and he, perceiving the flames, instantly waked my wife and daughter; and all running out, naked, and wild with apprehension, recalled me to life with their anguish. But it was only to see objects of new terror; for the flames had by this time caught the roof of our dwelling, part after part continuing to fall in, while the family stood with silent agony, looking on as if they enjoyed the blaze. I gazed upon them and upon it by turns, and then looked round me for my two little ones; but they were not to be seen. O misery! "Where," cried I, "where are my two little ones?" — "They are burnt to death in the flames," says my wife calmly, "and I will die with them." That moment I heard the cry of the babes within, who were just awaked by the fire, and nothing could have stopped me. "Where, where are my children?" cried I, rushing through the flames, and bursting the door of the chamber in which they were confined. "Where are my little ones?" — "Here, dear papa; here we are," cried they together, while the flames were just catching the bed where they lay. I caught them both in my arms, and snatched them through the fire as fast as possible, while just as I was got out the roof sunk in. "Now," cried I, holding up my children, "now let the flames burn on, and all my possessions perish. Here they are; I have saved my treasure. Here, my dearest, here are our treasures, and we shall yet be happy." We kissed our little darlings a thousand times; they clasped us round the neck, and seemed to share our transports, while the mother laughed and wept by turns.

I now stood a calm spectator of the flames, and after some time began to perceive that my arm to the shoulder was scorched in a terrible manner. It was therefore out of my power to give my son any assistance, either in attempting to save our goods, or preventing the 5 flames spreading to our corn. By this time the neighbors were alarmed, and came running to our assistance; but all they could do was to stand, like us, spectators of the calamity. My goods, among which were the notes I had reserved for my daughters' fortunes, were entirely

10 consumed, except a box with some papers that stood in the kitchen, and two or three things more of little consequence, which my son brought away in the beginning. The neighbors contributed, however, what they could to lighten our distress. They brought us clothes, and furnished
15 one of our outhouses with kitchen utensils; so that by daylight we had another, though a wretched, dwelling, to retire to. My honest next neighbor and his children were not the least assiduous in providing us with everything necessary, and offering whatever consolation 20 untutored benevolence could suggest.

When the fears of my family had subsided, curiosity to know the cause of my long stay began to take place; having therefore informed them of every particular, I proceeded to prepare for the reception of our lost one, 25 and though we had nothing but wretchedness now to impart, I was willing to procure her a welcome to what we had. This task would have been more difficult but for our recent calamity, which had humbled my wife's pride, and blunted it by more poignant afflictions. Being unable to go for my poor child myself, as my arm grew very painful, I sent my son and daughter, who soon returned, supporting the wretched delinquent, who had not the courage to look up at her mother, whom no instructions of mine could persuade to a perfect reconciliation; for women have a much stronger sense of female error than men. "Ah, madam," cried her mother, "this is but a poor place you are come to after so much finery. My daughter Sophy and I can afford but little entertainment to persons who have kept company only 10 with people of distinction. Yes, Miss Livy, your poor father and I have suffered very much of late; but I hope Heaven will forgive you." During this reception, the unhappy victim stood pale and trembling, unable to weep or to reply; but I could not continue a silent spectator of her distress, wherefore, assuming a degree of severity in my voice and manner, which was ever followed with instant submission, "I entreat, woman, that my words may be now marked once for all. I have here brought you back a poor deluded wanderer; her return 20 to duty demands the revival of our tenderness. The real hardships of life are now coming fast upon us; let us not, therefore, increase them by dissension among each other. If we live harmoniously together, we may yet be contented, as there are enough of us to shut out 25 the censuring world, and keep each other in countenance. The kindness of Heaven is promised to the penitent, and let ours be directed by the example. Heaven, we are assured, is much more pleased to view a repentant sinner, than ninety-nine persons who have supported a course of undeviating rectitude. And this is right; for that single effort by which we stop short in the down-hill path to perdition, is itself a greater exertion of virtue than a hundred acts of justice.”

CHAPTER XXIII.

NONE BUT THE GUILTY CAN BE LONG AND COMPLETELY MISERABLE.

SOME assiduity was now required to make our present abode as convenient as possible, and we were soon again qualified to enjoy our former serenity. Being disabled myself from assisting my son in our usual occupations, I read to my family the few books that were saved, and particularly from such as, by amusing the imagination, contributed to ease the heart. Our good neighbors too came every day with the kindest condolence, and fixed a time in which they were all to assist at repairing my former dwelling. Honest farmer Williams was not last among these visitors, but heartily offered his friendship. He would even have renewed his addresses to my daughter; but she rejected him in such a manner as totally repress his future solicitations. Her grief seemed formed for continuing, and she was the only person of our little society that a week did not restore to cheerfulness. She had now lost that unblushing innocence which once taught her to respect herself and to seek pleasure by pleasing. Anxiety now had taken possession of her mind; her beauty began to be impaired with her constitution, and neglect still more contributed to diminish it. Every tender epithet bestowed on her sister brought a pang to her heart and a tear to her eye ; and as one vice, though cured, ever plants others where it has been, so her former guilt, though driven out by 5 repentance, left jealousy and envy behind. I strove a thousand ways to lessen her care, and even forgot my own pain in a concern for hers, collecting such amusing passages of history as a strong memory and some reading could suggest. "Our happiness, my dear," I would 10 say, "is in the power of one who can bring it about a thousand unforeseen ways that mock our foresight. If example be necessary to prove this, I'll give you a story, my child, told us by a grave, though sometimes a romancing, historian.

15 "Matilda was married very young to a Neapolitan nobleman of the first quality, and found herself a widow and a mother at the age of fifteen. As she stood one day caressing her infant son in the open window of an apartment which hung over the river Volturna, the 20 child with a sudden spring leaped from her arms into the flood below, and disappeared in a moment. The mother, struck with instant surprise, and making an effort to save him, plunged in after ; but far from being able to assist the infant, she herself with great difficulty 25 escaped to the opposite shore, just when some French soldiers were plundering the country on that side, who immediately made her their prisoner.

"As the war was then carried on between the French and Italians with the utmost inhumanity, they were going at once to perpetrate those two extremes suggested by appetite and cruelty. This base resolution, however, was opposed by a young officer, who, though their retreat required the utmost expedition, placed her behind him, and brought her in safety to his native city. 5 Her beauty at first caught his eye, her merit soon after his heart. They were married: he rose to the highest posts; they lived long together, and were happy. But the felicity of a soldier can never be called permanent; after an interval of several years, the troops which he 10 commanded having met with a repulse, he was obliged to take shelter in the city where he had lived with his wife. Here they suffered a siege, and the city at length was taken. Few histories can produce more various instances of cruelty than those which the French and 15 Italians at that time exercised upon each other. It was resolved by the victors, upon this occasion, to put all the French prisoners to death, but particularly the husband of the unfortunate Matilda, as he was principally instrumental in protracting the siege. Their determina- 20 tions were in general executed almost as soon as resolved upon. The captive soldier was led forth, and the executioner with his sword stood ready, while the spectators in gloomy silence awaited the fatal blow, which was only suspended till the general, who presided as 25 judge, should give the signal. It was in this interval of anguish and expectation that Matilda came to take her last farewell of her husband and deliverer, deploring her wretched situation, and the cruelty of fate that had saved her from perishing by a premature death in the river Volturna, to be the spectator of still greater calamities. The general, who was a young man, was struck with surprise at her beauty, and pity at her distress; but with still stronger emotions when he heard her mention her former dangers. He was her son, the infant for whom she had encountered so much danger. He acknowledged her at once as his mother, and fell at her feet. The rest may be easily supposed: the captive was set free, and all the happiness that love, friendship, and duty could confer on each were united."

In this manner I would attempt to amuse my daughter: but she listened with divided attention, for her own misfortunes engrossed all the pity she once had for those of another, and nothing gave her ease. In company she dreaded contempt; and in solitude she only found anxiety. Such was the color of her wretchedness, when we received certain information that Mr. Thornhill was going to be married to Miss Wilmot, for whom I always suspected he had a real passion, though he took every opportunity before me to express his contempt both of her person and fortune. This news only served to increase poor Olivia's affliction; such a flagrant breach of fidelity was more than her courage could support. I was resolved, however, to get more certain information, and to defeat, if possible, the completion of his designs, by sending my son to old Mr. Wilmot's with instructions to know the truth of the report, and to deliver Miss Wilmot a letter, intimating Mr. Thornhill's conduct in my family. My son went in pursuance of my directions, and in three days returned, assuring us of the truth of the account; but that he had found it impossible to deliver the letter, which he was therefore obliged to leave, as Mr. Thornhill and Miss Wilmot were visiting round 5 the country. They were to be married, he said, in a few days, having appeared together at church the Sunday before he was there, in great splendor, the bride attended by six young ladies, and he by as many gentlemen. Their approaching nuptials filled the whole 10 country with rejoicing, and they usually rode out together in the grandest equipage that had been seen in the country for many years. All the friends of both families, he said, were there, particularly the Squire's uncle, Sir William Thornhill, who bore so good a char- 15 acter. He added that nothing but mirth and feasting were going forward; that all the country praised the young bride's beauty and the bridegroom's fine person, and that they were immensely fond of each other; concluding, that he could not help thinking Mr. Thornhill 20 one of the most happy men in the world.

"Why, let him if he can," returned I; "but, my son, observe this bed of straw and unsheltering roof; those mouldering walls and humid floor; my wretched body thus disabled by fire, and my children weeping 25 round me for bread. You have come home, my child, to all this; yet here, even here, you see a man that would not for a thousand worlds exchange situations. O my children, if you could but learn to commune with your own hearts, and know what noble company you can make them, you would little regard the elegance and splendor of the worthless. Almost all men have been taught to call life a passage, and themselves the travellers. The similitude still may be improved, when we observe that the good are joyful and serene, like travellers that are going towards home; the wicked but by intervals happy, like travellers that are going into exile."

10 My compassion for my poor daughter, overpowered by this new disaster, interrupted what I had further to observe. I bade her mother support her, and after a short time she recovered. She appeared from that time more calm, and I imagined had gained a new degree of 15 resolution; but appearances deceived me, for her tranquillity was the languor of overwrought resentment. A supply of provisions, charitably sent us by my kind parishioners, seemed to diffuse new cheerfulness among the rest of the family; nor was I displeased at seeing them 20 once more sprightly and at ease. It would have been unjust to damp their satisfactions, merely to condole with resolute melancholy, or to burden them with a sadness they did not feel. Thus once more the tale went round and the song was demanded, and cheerfulness con-25 descended to hover round our little habitation.

CHAPTER XXIV.

FRESH CALAMITIES.

THE next morning the sun arose with peculiar warmth for the season, so that we agreed to breakfast together on the honeysuckle bank; where, while we sat, my youngest daughter, at my request, joined her voice to the concert on the trees about us. It was in this place that my poor Olivia first met her seducer, and every object served to recall her sadness. But that melancholy which is excited by objects of pleasure, or inspired by sounds of harmony, soothes the heart instead of corroding it. Her mother too upon this occasion felt a pleasing distress, and wept, and loved her daughter as before. "Do, my pretty Olivia," cried she, "let us have that little melancholy air your papa was so fond of; your sister Sophy has already obliged us. Do, child; it will please your old father." She complied in a manner so exquisitely pathetic as moved us.

When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray;
What charm can soothe her melancholy,
What art can wash her guilt away?

20

The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover,
And wring his bosom — is to die.

As she was concluding the last stanza, to which an interruption in her voice from sorrow gave peculiar softness, the appearance of Mr. Thornhill's equipage at a distance alarmed us all, but particularly increased the 5 uneasiness of my eldest daughter, who, desirous of shunning her betrayer, returned to the house with her sister. In a few minutes he was alighted from his chariot, and making up to the place where I was still sitting, inquired after my health with his usual air of familiarity. "Sir,"
10 replied I, "your present assurance only serves to aggravate the baseness of your character; and there was a time when I would have chastised your insolence for presuming thus to appear before me. But now you are safe, for age has cooled my passions, and my calling 15 restrains them."

"I vow, my dear sir," returned he, "I am amazed at all this; nor can I understand what it means! I hope you don't think your daughter's late excursion with me had anything criminal in it?"

20 "Go!" cried I; "thou art a wretch, a poor pitiful wretch, and every way a liar; but your meanness secures you from my anger! Yet, sir, I am descended from a family that would not have borne this! And so, thou vile thing, to gratify a momentary passion, thou hast 25 made one poor creature wretched for life, and polluted a family that had nothing but honor for their portion."

"If she or you," returned he, "are resolved to be miserable, I cannot help it. But you may still be happy; and whatever opinion you may have formed of me, you shall ever find me ready to contribute to it. We can marry her to another in a short time, and, what is more, she may keep her lover beside; for I protest I shall ever continue to have a true regard for her."

I found all my passions alarmed at this new degrading proposal; for though the mind may often be calm 5 under great injuries, little villany can at any time get within the soul, and sting it into rage. "Avoid my sight, thou reptile!" cried I, "nor continue to insult me with thy presence. Were my brave son at home 10 he would not suffer this; but I am old and disabled, and every way undone."

"I find," cried he, "you are bent upon obliging me to talk in a harsher manner than I intended. But as I have shown you what may be hoped from my friend- 15 ship, it may not be improper to represent what may be the consequences of my resentment. My attorney, to whom your late bond has been transferred, threatens hard; nor do I know how to prevent the course of justice, except by paying the money myself, which, as I have 20 been at some expenses lately, previous to my intended marriage, is not so easily to be done. And then my steward talks of driving for the rent; it is certain he knows his duty, for I never trouble myself with affairs of that nature. Yet still I could wish to serve you, and 25 even to have you and your daughter present at my marriage, which is shortly to be solemnized with Miss Wilmot; it is even the request of my charming Arabella herself, whom I hope you will not refuse."

“Mr. Thornhill,” replied I, “hear me once for all. As to your marriage with any but my daughter, that I never will consent to; and though your friendship could raise me to a throne, or resentment sink me to the 5 grave, yet would I despise both. Thou hast once wo-fully, irreparably deceived me. I reposed my heart upon thine honor, and have found its baseness. Never more, therefore, expect friendship from me. Go, and possess what fortune has given thee,—beauty, riches, 10 health, and pleasure. Go, and leave me to want, infamy, disease, and sorrow. Yet, humbled as I am, shall my heart still vindicate its dignity; and though thou hast my forgiveness, thou shalt ever have my contempt.”

“If so,” returned he, “depend upon it you shall feel 15 the effects of this insolence; and we shall shortly see which is the fittest object of scorn, you or me.” Upon which he departed abruptly.

My wife and son, who were present at this interview, seemed terrified with apprehension. My daughters also, 20 finding that he was gone, came out to be informed of the result of our conference, which, when known, alarmed them not less than the rest. But as to myself, I disregarded the utmost stretch of his malevolence: he had already struck the blow, and now I stood prepared 25 to repel every new effort; like one of those instruments used in the art of war, which, however thrown, still presents a point to receive the enemy.

We soon, however, found that he had not threatened in vain; for the very next morning his steward came to demand my annual rent, which, by the train of accidents already related, I was unable to pay. The consequence of my incapacity was his driving my cattle that evening, and their being appraised and sold the next day for less than half their value. My wife and 5 children now, therefore, entreated me to comply upon any terms, rather than incur certain destruction. They even begged of me to admit his visits once more, and used all their little eloquence to paint the calamities I was going to endure, —the terrors of a prison in so 10 rigorous a season as the present, with the danger that threatened my health from the late accident that happened by the fire. But I continued inflexible.

“Why, my treasures,” cried I, “why will you thus attempt to persuade me to the thing that is not right? 15 My duty has taught me to forgive him; but my conscience will not permit me to approve. Would you have me applaud to the world what my heart must internally condemn? Would you have me tamely sit down and flatter our infamous betrayer, and, to avoid a 20 prison, continually suffer the more galling bonds of mental confinement? No, never! If we are to be taken from this abode, only let us hold to the right; and wherever we are thrown, we can still retire to a charming apartment, when we can look round our own hearts 25 with intrepidity and with pleasure!”

In this manner we spent that evening. Early the next morning, as the snow had fallen in great abundance in the night, my son was employed in clearing it away, and opening a passage before the door. He had not been thus engaged long, when he came running in, with looks all pale, to tell us that two strangers, whom he knew to be officers of justice, were making towards the house.

5 Just as he spake they came in, and approaching the bed where I lay, after previously informing me of their employment and business, made me their prisoner, bidding me prepare to go with them to the county jail, which was eleven miles off.

10 "My friends," said I, "this is severe weather in which you have come to take me to a prison; and it is particularly unfortunate at this time, as one of my arms has lately been burnt in a terrible manner, and it has thrown me into a slight fever, and I want clothes to 15 cover me; and I am now too weak and old to walk far in such deep snow; but if it must be so" —

I then turned to my wife and children, and directed them to get together what few things were left us, and to prepare immediately for leaving this place. I
20 entreated them to be expeditious, and desired my son to assist his eldest sister, who, from a consciousness that she was the cause of all our calamities, was fallen, and had lost anguish in insensibility. I encouraged my wife, who, pale and trembling, clasped our affrighted 25 little ones in her arms, that clung to her bosom in silence, dreading to look round at the strangers. In the meantime my youngest daughter prepared for our departure, and, as she received several hints to use despatch, in about an hour we were ready to depart.

CHAPTER XXV.

NO SITUATION, HOWEVER WRETCHED IT SEEMS, BUT HAS SOME SORT OF COMFORT ATTENDING IT.

WE set forward from this peaceful neighborhood, and walked on slowly. My eldest daughter being enfeebled by a slow fever, which had begun for some days to undermine her constitution, one of the officers, who had a horse, kindly took her behind him; for even these men cannot entirely divest themselves of humanity. My son led one of the little ones by the hand, and my wife the other, while I leaned upon my youngest girl, whose tears fell not for her own but my distresses.

WE were now got from my late dwelling about two miles, when we saw a crowd running and shouting behind us, consisting of about fifty of my poorest parishioners. These, with dreadful imprecations, soon seized upon the two officers of justice, and swearing they would never see their minister go to jail while they had a drop of blood to shed in his defence, were going to use them with the greatest severity. The consequence might have been fatal had I not immediately interposed, and with some difficulty rescued the officers from the hands of the enraged multitude. My children, who looked upon my delivery now as certain, appeared transported with joy, and were incapable of containing their raptures. But they were soon undeceived, upon hearing me address the poor deluded people, who came, as they imagined, to do me service.

5 "What! my friends," cried I, "and is this the way you love me? Is this the manner you obey the instructions I have given you from the pulpit? Thus to fly in the face of justice, and bring down ruin on yourselves and me? Which is your ringleader? Show me the 10 man that has thus seduced you. As sure as he lives he shall feel my resentment. Alas! my dear deluded flock, return back to the duty you owe to God, to your country, and to me. I shall yet, perhaps, one day see you in greater felicity here, and contribute to make 15 your lives more happy. But let it at least be my comfort when I pen my fold for immortality, that not one here shall be wanting."

They now seemed all repentance, and, melting into tears, came one after the other to bid me farewell. I 20 shook each tenderly by the hand, and, leaving them my blessing, proceeded forward without meeting any further interruption. Some hours before night we reached the town, or rather village, for it consisted but of a few mean houses, having lost all its former opulence, and 25 retaining no marks of its ancient superiority but the jail.

Upon entering we put up at the inn, where we had such refreshments as could most readily be procured, and I supped with my family with my usual cheerfulness. After seeing them properly accommodated for that night, I next attended the sheriff's officers to the prison, which had formerly been built for the purposes of war, and consisted of one large apartment, strongly grated, and paved with stone, common to both felous 5 and debtors at certain hours in the four and twenty. Besides this, every prisoner had a separate cell, where he was locked in for the night.

I expected upon my entrance to find nothing but lamentations and various sounds of misery ; but it was very 10 different. The prisoners seemed all employed in one common design, that of forgetting thought in merriment or clamor. I was apprised of the usual perquisite required upon these occasions, and immediately complied 15 with the demand, though the little money I had was very near being all exhausted. This was immediately sent away for liquor, and the whole prison soon was filled with riot, laughter, and profaneness.

"How," cried I to myself, "shall men so very wicked be cheerful, and shall I be melancholy ; I feel only the 20 same confinement with them, and I think I have more reason to be happy."

With such reflections I labored to become cheerful ; but cheerfulness was never yet produced by effort, which is it self painful. As I was sitting, therefore, in 25 a corner of the jail, in a pensive posture, one of my fellow-prisoners came up, and, sitting by me, entered into conversation. It was my constant rule in life never to avoid the conversation of any man who seemed to desire it: for if good, I might profit by his instruction; if bad, he might be assisted by mine. I found this to be a knowing man, of strong unlettered sense, but a thorough knowledge of the world, as it was 5 called, or, more properly speaking, of human nature on the wrong side. He asked me if I had taken care to provide myself with a bed, which was a circumstance I had never once attended to.

“That’s unfortunate,” cried he, “as you are allowed
10 here nothing but straw, and your apartment is very large and cold. However, you seem to be something of a gentleman, and as I have been one myself in my time, part of my bed-clothes are heartily at your service.”

I thanked him, professing my surprise at finding such 15 humanity in a jail in misfortunes; adding, to let him see that I was a scholar, “That the sage ancient seemed to understand the value of company in affliction, when he said, Ton kosmon aire, ei dos ton etairon; and in fact,” continued I, “what is the world if it affords only 20 solitude?”

“You talk of the world, sir,” returned my fellow-prisoner; “the world is in its dotage; and yet the cosmogony or creation of the world has puzzled the philosophers of every age. What a medley of opinions have 25 they not broached upon the creation of the world! Sanchoniathon, Manetho, Berosus, and Ocellus Lucanus, have all attempted it in vain. The latter has these words, Anarchon ara kai atelutaion to pan, which implies” —
“I ask pardon, sir,” cried I, “for interrupting so much learning, but I think I have heard all this before. Have I not had the pleasure of once seeing you at Welbridge fair, and is not your name Ephraim Jenkinson?" At this demand he only sighed. "I suppose you must recollect," resumed I, "one Doctor Primrose, from whom 5 you bought a horse?"

He now at once recollected me; for the gloominess of the place and the approaching night had prevented his distinguishing my features before. "Yes, sir," returned Mr. Jenkinson, "I remember you perfectly well; 10 I bought a horse, but forgot to pay for him. Your neighbor Flamborough is the only prosecutor I am any way afraid of at the next assizes; for he intends to swear positively against me as a coiner. I am heartily sorry, sir, I ever deceived you, or indeed any man; for 15 you see," continued he, showing his shackles, "what my tricks have brought me to."

"Well, sir," replied I, "your kindness in offering me assistance when you could expect no return, shall be repaid with my endeavors to soften or totally suppress 20 Mr. Flamborough's evidence, and I will send my son to him for that purpose the first opportunity: nor do I in the least doubt but he will comply with my request; and as to my own evidence, you need be under no uneasiness about that." 25

"Well, sir," cried he, "all the return I can make shall be yours. You shall have more than half my bed-clothes to-night, and I'll take care to stand your friend in the prison, where I think I have some influence."

I thanked him, and could not avoid being surprised at the present youthful change in his aspect; for at the time I had seen him before, he appeared at least sixty. "Sir," answered he, "you are little acquainted with the 5 world; I had at that time false hair, and have learned the art of counterfeiting every age from seventeen to seventy. Ah, sir, had I but bestowed half the pains in learning a trade, that I have in learning to be a scoundrel, I might have been a rich man at this day!
10 But rogue as I am, still I may be your friend, and that perhaps when you least expect it."

We were now prevented from further conversation by the arrival of the jailer's servants, who came to call over the prisoners' names, and lock up for the night.
15 A fellow also with a bundle of straw for my bed attended, who led me along a dark, narrow passage into a room paved like the common prison; and in one corner of this I spread my bed, and the clothes given me by my fellow-prisoner, which done, my conductor, who was 20 civil enough, bade me a good night. After my usual meditations, and having praised my Heavenly Corrector, I laid myself down, and slept with the utmost tranquillity till morning.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A REFORMATION IN THE JAIL. — TO MAKE LAWS COMPLETE, THEY SHOULD REWARD AS WELL AS PUNISH.

THE next morning early I was awakened by my family, whom I found in tears at my bedside. The gloomy strength of everything about us, it seems, had daunted them. I gently rebuked their sorrow, assuring them I had never slept with greater tranquillity, and next 5 inquired after my eldest daughter, who was not among them. They informed me that yesterday's uneasiness and fatigue had increased her fever, and it was judged proper to leave her behind. My next care was to send my son to procure a room or two to lodge the family 10 in, as near the prison as conveniently could be found. He obeyed; but could only find one apartment, which was hired at a small expense for his mother and sisters, the jailer with humanity consenting to let him and his two brothers lie in the prison with me. A bed was 15 therefore prepared for them in a corner of the room, which I thought answered very conveniently. I was willing, however, previously to know whether my little children chose to lie in a place which seemed to fright them upon entrance.

20

“Well,” cried I, “my good boys, how do you like your bed? I hope you are not afraid to lie in this room, dark as it appears?"

"No, papa," says Dick; "I am not afraid to lie anywhere where you are."

5 "And I," says Bill, who was yet but four years old, "love every place best that my papa is in."

After this I allotted to each of the family what they were to do. My daughter was particularly directed to watch her declining sister's health; my wife was to 10 attend to me; my little boys were to read to me.

"And as for you, my son," continued I, "it is by the labor of your hands we must all hope to be supported. Your wages as a day-laborer will be fully sufficient, with proper frugality, to maintain us all, and comfort-15 ably too. Thou art now sixteen years old, and hast strength; and it was given thee, my son, for very useful purposes, for it must save from famine your helpless parents and family. Prepare, then, this evening to look out for work against to-morrow, and bring home 20 every night what money you earn for our support."

Having thus instructed him, and settled the rest, I walked down to the common prison, where I could enjoy more air and room. But I was not long there when the execrations, lewdness, and brutality that invaded 25 me on every side drove me back to my apartment again. Here I sat for some time pondering upon the strange infatuation of wretches who, finding all mankind in open arms against them, were laboring to make themselves a future and a tremendous enemy.

Their insensibility excited my highest compassion, and blotted my own uneasiness from my mind. It even appeared a duty incumbent upon me to attempt to reclaim them. I resolved, therefore, once more to return, and, in spite of their contempt, to give them 5 my advice, and conquer them by perserverance. Going, therefore, among them again, I informed Mr. Jenkinson of my design, at which he laughed, but communicated it to the rest. The proposal was received with the greatest good humor, as it promised to afford a new 10 fund of entertainment to persons who had now no other resource for mirth but what could be derived from ridicule or debauchery.

I therefore read them a portion of the service with a loud, unaffected voice, and found my audience perfectly merry upon the occasion. Lewd whispers, groans of contrition burlesqued, winking and coughing, alternately excited laughter. However, I continued with my natural solemnity to read on, sensible that what I did might mend some, but could itself receive no con- 20 tamination from any.

After reading I entered upon my exhortation, which was rather calculated at first to amuse than to reprove. I previously observed that no other motive but their welfare could induce me to this; that I was their fellow-prisoner, and now got nothing by preaching. I was sorry, I said, to hear them so very profane; because they got nothing by it, but might lose a great deal. "For be assured, my friends," cried I, "for you are my friends, however the world may disclaim your friendship, though you swore a thousand oaths in a day, it would not put one penny in your purse. Then what signifies calling every moment upon the devil, and 5 courting his friendship, since you find how scurvily he uses you? He has given you nothing here, you find, but a mouthful of oaths and an empty belly; and by the best accounts I have of him, he will give you nothing that's good hereafter.

10 "If used ill in our dealings with one man, we naturally go elsewhere. Were it not worth your while, then, just to try how you may like the usage of another master, who gives you fair promises at least to come to him? Surely, my friends, of all stupidity in the world,
15 his must be the greatest who, after robbing a house, runs to the thief-takers for protection. And yet how are you more wise? You are all seeking comfort from one that has already betrayed you, applying to a more malicious being than any thief-taker of them all; for 20 they only decoy, and then hang you; but he decoys and hangs, and, what is worst of all, will not let you loose after the hangman is done."

When I had concluded, I received the compliments of my audience, some of whom came and shook me by the 25 hand, swearing that I was a very honest fellow, and that they desired my further acquaintance. I therefore promised to repeat my lecture next day, and actually conceived some hopes of making a reformation here; for it had ever been my opinion that no man was past the hour of amendment, every heart lying open to the shafts of reproof, if the archer could but take a proper aim. When I had thus satisfied my mind, I went back to my apartment, where my wife prepared a frugal meal; while Mr. Jenkinson begged leave to add his dinner 5 to ours, and partake of the pleasure, as he was kind enough to express it, of my conversation. He had not yet seen my family; for as they came to my apartment by a door in the narrow passage already described, by this means they avoided the common prison. Jenkin-10 son, at the first interview, therefore, seemed not a little struck with the beauty of my youngest daughter, which her pensive air contributed to heighten; and my little ones did not pass unnoticed.

“Alas, doctor,” cried he, “these children are too handsome and too good for such a place as this!”

“Why, Mr. Jenkinson,” replied I, “thank Heaven my children are pretty tolerable in morals; and if they be good, it matters little for the rest.”

“I fancy, sir,” returned my fellow-prisoner, “that it 20 must give you great comfort to have all this little family about you.”

“A comfort, Mr. Jenkinson!” replied I; “yes, it is indeed a comfort, and I would not be without them for all the world; for they can make a dungeon seem a 25 palace. There is but one way in this life of wounding my happiness, and that is by injuring them.”

“I am afraid, then, sir,” cried he, “that I am in some measure culpable; for I think I see here” (looking at my son Moses) "one that I have injured, and by whom I wish to be forgiven."

My son immediately recollected his voice and features, though he had before seen him in disguise, and taking 5 him by the hand, with a smile forgave him. "Yet," continued he, "I can't help wondering at what you could see in my face to think me a proper mark for deception."

"My dear sir," returned the other, "it was not your 10 face, but your white stockings, and the black riband in your hair, that allured me. But no disparagement to your parts, I have deceived wiser men than you in my time; and yet, with all my tricks, the blockheads have been too many for me at last."

15 "I suppose," cried my son, "that the narrative of such a life as yours must be extremely instructive and amusing."

"Not much of either," returned Mr. Jenkinson. "Those relations which describe the tricks and vices 20 only of mankind, by increasing our suspicion in life, retard our success. The traveller that distrusts every person he meets, and turns back upon the appearance of every man that looks like a robber, seldom arrives in time at his journey's end.

25 "Indeed, I think, from my own experience, that the knowing one is the silliest fellow under the sun. I was thought cunning from my very childhood. When but seven years old the ladies would say that I was a perfect little man; at fourteen I knew the world, cocked my hat, and loved the ladies ; at twenty, though I was perfectly honest, yet every one thought me so cunning, that not one would trust me. Thus at last I was obliged to turn sharper in my own defence, and have lived ever since, my head throbbing with schemes to deceive, and my heart palpitating with fears of detection. I used often to laugh at your honest, simple neighbor Flamborough, and one way or another generally cheated him once a year. Yet still the honest man went forward without suspicion, and grew rich, while I still continued tricky and cunning, and was poor without the consolation of being honest. However," continued he, "let me know your case, and what has brought you here ; perhaps, though I have not skill to avoid a jail myself, I may extricate my friends." 15

In compliance with his curiosity, I informed him of the whole train of accidents and follies that had plunged me into my present troubles, and my utter inability to get free.

After hearing my story, and pausing some minutes, 20 he slapt his forehead, as if he had hit upon something material, and took his leave, saying he would try what could be done.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

THE next morning I communicated to my wife and children the scheme I had planned of reforming the prisoners, which they received with universal disapprobation, alleging the impossibility and impropriety of it; adding that my endeavors would no way contribute to their amendment, but might probably disgrace my calling.

“Excuse me,” returned I, “these people, however fallen, are still men; and that is a very good title to my affections. Good counsel rejected returns to enrich the giver’s bosom; and though the instruction I communicate may not mend them, yet it will assuredly mend myself. If these wretches, my children, were princes, there would be thousands ready to offer their ministry; but in my opinion the heart that is buried in a dungeon is as precious as that seated upon the throne. Yes, my treasures, if I can mend them, I will; perhaps they will not all despise me. Perhaps I may catch up even one from the gulf, and that will be great gain; for is there upon earth a gem so precious as the human soul?”

Thus saying, I left them, and descended to the common prison, where I found the prisoners very merry, expecting my arrival, and each prepared with some jail trick to play upon the doctor. Thus, as I was going to begin, one turned my wig awry, as if by accident, and then asked my pardon. A second, who stood at some 5 distance, had a knack of spitting through his teeth, which fell in showers upon my book. A third would cry amen with such an affected tone as gave the rest great delight. A fourth had slyly picked my pocket of my spectacles. But there was one whose trick gave 10 more universal pleasure than all the rest; for observing the manner in which I had disposed of my books on the table before me, he very dexterously displaced one of them, and put an obscene jest-book of his own in the place. However, I took no notice of all that 15 this mischievous group of little beings could do, but went on, perfectly sensible that what was ridiculous in my attempt would excite mirth only the first or second time, while what was serious would be permanent. My design succeeded, and in less than six days some were 20 penitent, and all attentive.

It was now that I applauded my perseverance and address, at thus giving sensibility to wretches divested of every moral feeling; and now began to think of doing them temporal services also, by rendering their situation somewhat more comfortable. Their time had hitherto been divided between famine and excess, tumultuous riot and bitter repining. Their only employment was quarrelling among each other, playing at cribbage, and cutting tobacco-stoppers. From this last mode of idle industry I took the hint of setting such as chose to work at cutting pegs for tobacconists and shoemakers, the proper wood being bought by a general subscription, and when manufactured sold by my appointment; so that each earned something every day, — a trifle, indeed, but sufficient to maintain him.

I did not stop here, but instituted fines for the punishment of immorality, and rewards for peculiar industry. Thus in less than a fortnight I had formed them into something social and humane, and had the pleasure of regarding myself as a legislator who had brought men from their native ferocity into friendship and obedience.

And it were highly to be wished that legislative power would thus direct the law rather to reformation than severity; that it would seem convinced that the work of eradicating crimes is not by making punishments familiar, but formidable. Then, instead of our present prisons, which find or make men guilty, which enclose wretches for the commission of one crime, and return them, if returned alive, fitted for the perpetration of thousands, we should see, as in other parts of Europe, places of penitence and solitude, where the accused might be attended by such as could give them repentance, if guilty, or new motives to virtue, if innocent. And this, but not the increasing punishments, is the way to mend a state. Nor can I avoid even questioning the validity of that right which social combinations have assumed, of capitally punishing offences of a slight nature. In cases of murder their right is obvious, as it is the duty of us all, from the law of self-defence, to cut off that man who has shown a disregard for the life of another. Against such all nature rises in arms; but it is not so against him who steals my 5 property. Natural law gives me no right to take away his life, as by that, the horse he steals is as much his property as mine. If, then, I have any right, it must be from a compact made between us, that he who deprives the other of his horse shall die. But this is a false 10 compact, because no man has a right to barter his life any more than to take it away, as it is not his own. And beside, the compact is inadequate, and would be set aside even in a court of modern equity, as there is a great penalty for a very trifling convenience, since it is 15 far better that two men should live, than that one man should ride. But a compact that is false between two men, is equally so between a hundred, or a hundred thousand; for as ten millions of circles can never make a square, so the united voice of myriads cannot lend the 20 smallest foundation to falsehood. It is thus that reason speaks, and untutored nature says the same thing. Savages that are directed by natural law alone are very tender of the lives of each other; they seldom shed blood but to retaliate former cruelty. 25

Our Saxon ancestors, fierce as they were in war, had but few executions in times of peace; and in all commencing governments that have the print of nature still strong upon them, scarcely any crime is held capital.

It is among the citizens of a refined community that penal laws, which are in the hands of the rich, are laid upon the poor. Government, while it grows older, seems to acquire the moroseness of age; and as if our property
5 were become dearer in proportion as it increased; as if the more enormous our wealth, the more extensive our fears, all our possessions are paled up with new edicts every day, and hung round with gibbets to scare every invader.

10 I cannot tell whether it is from the number of our penal laws or the licentiousness of our people, that this country should show more convicts in a year than half the dominions of Europe united. Perhaps it is owing to both, for they mutually produce each other. When,
15 by indiscriminate penal laws, a nation beholds the same punishment affixed to dissimilar degrees of guilt, from perceiving no distinction in the penalty, the people are led to lose all sense of distinction in the crime, and this distinction is the bulwark of all morality. Thus the 20 multitude of the laws produce new vices, and new vices call for fresh restraints.

It were to be wished, then, that power instead of contriving new laws to punish vice; instead of drawing hard the cords of society till a convulsion come to burst 25 them; instead of cutting away wretches as useless before we have tried their utility; instead of converting correction into vengeance, — it were to be wished that we tried the restrictive arts of government, and made law the protector, but not the tyrant, of the people. We should then find that creatures whose souls are held as dross, only wanted the hand of a refiner. We should then find that creatures now stuck up for long tortures, lest luxury should feel a momentary pang, might, if properly treated, serve to sinew the state in times of danger; that as their faces are like ours, their hearts are so too; that few minds are so base as that perseverance cannot amend; that a man may see his last crime without dying for it; and that very little blood will serve to cement our security. 5

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HAPPINESS AND MISERY RATHER THE RESULT OF PRUDENCE THAN OF VIRTUE, IN THIS LIFE; TEMPORAL EVILS OR FELICITIES BEING REGARDED BY HEAVEN AS THINGS MERELY IN THEMSELVES TRIFLING, AND UNWORTHY ITS CARE IN THE DISTRIBUTION.

I HAD now been confined more than a fortnight, but had not since my arrival been visited by my dear Olivia, and I greatly longed to see her. Having communicated my wishes to my wife, the next morning the poor girl
5 entered my apartment leaning on her sister's arm. The change which I saw on her countenance struck me. The numberless graces that once resided there were now fled, and the hand of death seemed to have moulded every feature to alarm me. Her temples were sunk, 10 her forehead was tense, and a fatal paleness sat upon her cheek.

"I am glad to see thee, my dear," cried I; "but why this dejection, Livy? I hope, my love, you have too great a regard for me to permit disappointment thus 15 to undermine a life which I prize as my own. Be cheerful, child, and we may yet see happier days."

"You have ever, sir," replied she, "been kind to me, and it adds to my pain that I shall never have an opportunity of sharing that happiness you promise. Happiness, I fear, is no longer reserved for me here; and I long to be rid of a place where I have only found distress. Indeed, sir, I wish you would make a proper submission to Mr. Thornhill; it may in some measure induce him to pity you, and it will give me relief in dying."

"Never, child," replied I; "never will I be brought to acknowledge my daughter a prostitute; for though the world may look upon your offence with scorn, let it be mine to regard it as a mark of credulity, not of guilt. My dear, I am no way miserable in this place, however dismal it may seem; and be assured, that while you continue to bless me by living, he shall never have my consent to make you more wretched by marrying 15 another."

After the departure of my daughter, my fellow-prisoner, who was by at this interview, sensibly enough expostulated on my obstinacy in refusing a submission which promised to give me freedom. He observed that 20 the rest of my family was not to be sacrificed to the peace of one child alone, and she the only one who had offended me. "Besides," added he, "I don't know if it be just thus to obstruct the union of man and wife; which you do at present, by refusing to consent to a 25 match you cannot hinder, but may render unhappy."

"Sir," replied I, "you are unacquainted with the man that oppresses us. I am very sensible that no submission I can make could procure me liberty even for an hour. I am told that even in this very room a debtor of his, no later than last year, died for want. But though my submission and approbation could transfer me from hence to the most beautiful apartment he is 5 possessed of, yet I would grant neither, as something whispers me that it would be giving a sanction to adultery. While my daughter lives, no other marriage of his shall ever be legal in my eye. Were she removed, indeed, I should be the basest of men, from any resent-

10 ment of my own, to attempt putting asunder those who wish for a union. No; villain as he is, I should then wish him married, to prevent the consequences of his future debaucheries. But now should I not be the most cruel of all fathers to sign an instrument which must 15 send my child to the grave, merely to avoid a prison myself; and thus, to escape one pang, break my child's heart with a thousand?"

He acquiesced in the justice of this answer, but could not avoid observing, that he feared my daughter's life 20 was already too much wasted to keep me long a prisoner. "However," continued he, "though you refuse to submit to the nephew, I hope you have no objection to laying your case before the uncle, who has the first character in the kingdom for everything that is just and 25 good. I would advise you to send him a letter by the post, intimating all his nephew's ill-usage, and my life for it, that in three days you shall have an answer." I thanked him for the hint, and instantly set about complying; but I wanted paper, and unluckily all our money had been laid out that morning in provisions; however, he supplied me.

For the three ensuing days I was in a state of anxiety to know what reception my letter might meet with; but in the meantime was frequently solicited by my wife to submit to any conditions rather than remain here, and every hour received repeated accounts of the decline of my daughter's health. The third day and the fourth arrived, but I received no answer to my letter: the complaints of a stranger against a favorite nephew were no way likely to succeed; so that these hopes soon vanished like all my former. My mind, however, still supported itself, though confinement and bad air began to make a visible alteration in my health, and my arm that had suffered in the fire grew worse. My children, however, sat by me, and while I was stretched on my straw read to me by turns, or listened and wept at my instructions. But my daughter's health declined faster than mine; every message from her contributed to increase my apprehension and pain. The fifth morning after I had written the letter which was sent to Sir William Thornhill, I was alarmed with an account that she was speechless. Now it was that confinement was truly painful to me; my soul was bursting from its prison to be near the pillow of my child, to comfort, to strengthen her, to receive her last wishes, and teach her soul the way to Heaven! Another account came: She was expiring, and yet I was debarred the small comfort of weeping by her. My fellow-prisoner, some time after, came with the last account. He bade me be patient; she was dead! The next morning he returned, and found me with my two little ones, now my only companions, who were using all their innocent efforts to comfort me. They entreated

5 to read to me, and bade me not cry, for I was now too old to weep. "And is not my sister an angel now, papa?" cried the eldest; "and why then are you sorry for her? I wish I were an angel, out of this frightful place, if my papa were with me." — "Yes," added my 10 youngest darling, "Heaven, where my sister is, is a finer place than this, and there is none but good people there, and the people here are very bad."

Mr. Jenkinson interrupted their harmless prattle by observing that, now my daughter was no more, I should 15 seriously think of the rest of my family, and attempt to save my own life, which was every day declining for want of necessaries and wholesome air. He added, that it was now incumbent on me to sacrifice any pride or resentment of my own to the welfare of those who 20 depended on me for support; and that I was now, both by reason and justice, obliged to try to reconcile my landlord.

"Heaven be praised," replied I, "there is no pride left me now; I should detest my own heart if I saw 25 either pride or resentment lurking there. On the contrary, as my oppressor has been once my parishioner, I hope one day to present him up an unpolluted soul at the eternal tribunal. No, sir, I have no resentment now; and though he has taken from me what I held dearer than all his treasures, though he has wrung my heart, — for I am sick almost to fainting, very sick, my fellow-prisoner, — yet that shall never inspire me with vengeance. I am now willing to approve his marriage; and if this submission can do him any pleasure, let him 5 know that if I have done him any injury I am sorry for it.”

Mr. Jenkinson took pen and ink, and wrote down my submission nearly as I had expressed it, to which I signed my name. My son was employed to carry the 10 letter to Mr. Thornhill, who was then at his seat in the country. He went, and in about six hours returned with a verbal answer. He had some difficulty, he said, to get a sight of his landlord, as the servants were insolent and suspicious; but he accidentally saw him as he 15 was going out upon business, preparing for his marriage, which was to be in three days. He continued to inform us that he stepped up in the humblest manner, and delivered the letter, which when Mr. Thornhill had read, he said that all submission was now too late and unne- 20 cessary; that he had heard of our application to his uncle, which met with the contempt it deserved; and as for the rest, that all future application should be directed to his attorney, not to him. He observed, however, that as he had a very good opinion of the discretion of the 25 two young ladies, they might have been the most agreeable intercessors.

“Well, sir,” said I to my fellow-prisoner, “you now discover the temper of the man that oppresses me. He can at once be facetious and cruel; but let him use me as he will, I shall soon be free, in spite of all his bolts to restrain me. I am now drawing towards an abode that looks brighter as I approach it; this expectation 5 cheers my afflictions, and though I leave a helpless family of orphans behind me, yet they will not be utterly forsaken; some friend will be found to assist them for the sake of their poor father, and some may charitably relieve them for the sake of their heavenly Father."

10 Just as I had spoke, my wife, whom I had not seen that day before, appeared with looks of terror, and making efforts, but unable to speak. "Why, my love," cried I, "why will you increase my afflictions by your own? What though no submissions can turn our severe 15 master, though he has doomed me to die in this place of wretchedness, and though we have lost a darling child, yet still you will find comfort in your other children when I shall be no more."—"We have indeed lost," returned she, "a darling child. My Sophia, my dearest, 20 is gone; snatched from us, carried off by ruffians!"—"How, madam," cried my fellow-prisoner, "Miss Sophia carried off by villains! Sure it cannot be!"

She could only answer with a fixed look and a flood of tears. But one of the prisoners' wives who was present, 25 and came in with her, gave us a more distinct account; she informed us, that as my wife, my daughter, and herself were taking a walk together on the great road, a little way out of the village, a post-chaise and pair drove up to them, and instantly stopped. Upon which a well-dressed man, but not Mr. Thornhill, stepping out, clasped my daughter round the waist, and forcing her in, bid the postilion drive on, so that they were out of sight in a moment.

“Now,” cried I, “the sum of my miseries is made up ; 5 nor is it in the power of anything on earth to give me another pang. What! not one left! not to leave me one! The monster! The child that was next to my heart! She has the beauty of an angel, and almost the wisdom of an angel. But support that woman, nor let 10 her fall. Not to leave me one!”

“Alas! my husband,” said my wife, “you seem to want comfort even more than I. Our distresses are great; but I could bear this, and more, if I saw you but easy. They may take away my children, and all the 15 world, if they leave me but you.”

My son, who was present, endeavored to moderate her grief; he bade us take comfort, for he hoped that we might still have reason to be thankful. “My child,” cried I, “look round the world, and see if there be any 20 happiness left me now. Is not every ray of comfort shut out, while all our bright prospects only lie beyond the grave?” — “My dear father,” returned he, “I hope there is still something that will give you an interval of satisfaction; for I have a letter from my brother 25 George.” — “What of him, child?” interrupted I; “does he know our misery? I hope my boy is exempt from any part of what his wretched family suffers.” — “Yes, sir,” returned he, “he is perfectly gay, cheerful, and happy. His letter brings nothing but good news : he is the favorite of his colonel, who promises to procure him the very next lieutenantcy that becomes vacant."

"And are you sure of all this?" cried my wife.
5 "Are you sure that nothing ill has befallen my boy?"
—"Nothing, indeed, madam," returned my son. "You shall see the letter, which will give you the highest pleasure; and if anything can procure you comfort, I am sure that will."—"But are you sure," still repeated 10 she, "that the letter is from himself, and that he is really so happy?"—"Yes, madam," replied he, "it is certainly his, and he will one day be the credit and support of our family."—"Then I thank Providence," cried she, "that my last letter to him has mis-
15 carried. Yes, my dear," continued she, turning to me, "I will now confess that though the hand of Heaven is sore upon us in other instances, it has been favorable here. By the last letter I wrote my son, which was in the bitterness of anger, I desired him upon his mother's 20 blessing, and if he had the heart of a man, to see justice done his father and sister, and avenge our cause. But thanks be to Him that directs all things, it has miscarried, and I am at rest."—"Woman," cried I, "thou hast done very ill, and at another time my reproaches
25 might have been more severe. Oh, what a tremendous gulf hast thou escaped, that would have buried both thee and him in endless ruin! Providence indeed has here been kinder to us than we to ourselves. It has reserved that son to be the father and protector of my children when I shall be away. How unjustly did I complain of being stripped of every comfort, when still I hear that he is happy, and insensible of our afflictions; still kept in reserve to support his widowed mother, and to protect his brothers and sisters. But what sisters has he left? 5 He has no sisters now; they are all gone, robbed from me, and I am undone." — "Father," interrupted my son, "I beg you will give me leave to read this letter; I know it will please you." Upon which, with my permission, he read as follows:— 10

HONORED SIR, — I have called off my imagination a few moments from the pleasures that surround me, to fix it upon objects that are still more pleasing, — the dear little fireside at home. My fancy draws that harmless group as listening to every line of this with great com- 15 posure. I view those faces with delight which never felt the deforming hand of ambition or distress! But whatever your happiness may be at home, I am sure it will be some addition to it to hear that I am perfectly pleased with my situation, and every way happy here. 20

Our regiment is countermanded, and is not to leave the kingdom. The colonel, who professes himself my friend, takes me with him to all companies where he is acquainted, and after my first visit I generally find myself received with increased respect upon repeating it. 25 I danced last night with Lady G——, and could I forget you know whom, I might be perhaps successful. But it is my fate still to remember others, while I am myself forgotten by most of my absent friends : and in this number, I fear, sir, that I must consider you ; for I have long expected the pleasure of a letter from home, to no purpose. Olivia and Sophia too promised to write,

5 but seem to have forgotten me. Tell them they are two arrant little baggages, and that I am at this moment in a most violent passion with them ; yet still, I know not how, though I want to bluster a little, my heart is respondent only to softer emotions. Then tell them, sir, 10 that after all I love them affectionately, and be assured of my ever remaining,

Your dutiful Son.

“In all our miseries,” cried I, “what thanks have we not to return, that one at least of our family is ex-
15 emptied from what we suffer ! Heaven be his guard, and keep my boy thus happy, to be the supporter of his widowed mother, and the father of these two babes, which is all the patrimony I can now bequeath him ! May he keep their innocence from the temptations of 20 want, and be their conductor in the paths of honor !” I had scarcely said these words when a noise like that of a tumult seemed to proceed from the prison below ; it died away soon after, and a clanking of fetters was heard along the passage that led to my apartment. The 25 keeper of the prison entered, holding a man all bloody, wounded, and fettered with the heaviest irons. I looked with compassion on the wretch as he approached me, but with horror when I found it was my own son.

“My George! my George! and do I behold thee thus? Wounded — fettered! Is this thy happiness? Is this the manner you return to me? Oh, that this sight could break my heart at once, and let me die!”

“Where, sir, is your fortitude?” returned my son 5 with an intrepid voice. “I must suffer; my life is forfeited, and let them take it.”

I tried to restrain my passions for a few minutes in silence, but I thought I should have died with the effort. “O my boy, my heart weeps to behold thee 10 thus, and I cannot, cannot help it. In the moment when I thought thee blest, and prayed for thy safety, to behold thee thus again! Chained, wounded! And yet the death of the youthful is happy. But I am old, a very old man, and have lived to see this day! To see 15 my children all untimely falling about me, while I continue a wretched survivor in the midst of ruin! May all the curses that ever sunk a soul fall heavy upon the murderer of my children! May he live, like me, to see” —

20

“Hold, sir,” replied my son, “or I shall blush for thee. How, sir, forgetful of your age, your holy calling, thus to arrogate the justice of Heaven, and fling those curses upward that must soon descend to crush thy own gray head with destruction! No, sir, let it 25 be your care now to fit me for that vile death I must shortly suffer; to arm me with hope and resolution; to give me courage to drink of that bitterness which must shortly be my portion.”

“My child, you must not die; I am sure no offence of thine can deserve so vile a punishment. My George could never be guilty of any crime to make his ancestors ashamed of him.”

5 “Mine, sir,” returned my son, “is, I fear, an unpardonable one. When I received my mother’s letter from home, I immediately came down, determined to punish the betrayer of our honor, and sent him an order to meet me, which he answered, not in person, but 10 by despatching four of his domestics to seize me. I wounded one who first assaulted me, and I fear desperately; but the rest made me their prisoner. The coward is determined to put the law in execution against me: the proofs are undeniable; I have sent a challenge, 15 and as I am the first transgressor upon the statute, I see no hopes of pardon. But you have often charmed me with your lessons of fortitude; let me now, sir, find them in your example.”

“And, my son, you shall find them. I am now
20 raised above this world, and all the pleasures it can produce. From this moment I break from my heart all the ties that held it down to earth, and will prepare to fit us both for eternity. Yes, my son, I will point out the way, and my soul shall guide yours in the 25 ascent; for we will take our flight together. I now see and am convinced you can expect no pardon here; and I can only exhort you to seek it at that greatest tribunal where we both shall shortly answer. But let us not be niggardly in our exhortation, but let all our fellow-prisoners have a share. Good jailer, let them be permitted to stand here while I attempt to improve them." Thus saying, I made an effort to rise from my straw, but wanted strength, and was able only to recline against the wall. The prisoners assembled themselves according to my directions, for they loved to hear my counsel; my son and his mother supported me on either side. I looked and saw that none were wanting, and then addressed them with the following exhortation.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE EQUAL DEALINGS OF PROVIDENCE DEMONSTRATED WITH REGARD TO THE HAPPY AND THE MISERABLE HERE BELOW. — THAT FROM THE NATURE OF PLEASURE AND PAIN, THE WRETCHED MUST BE REPAID THE BALANCE OF THEIR SUFFERINGS IN THE LIFE HERE-AFTER.

My friends, my children, and fellow-sufferers, when I reflect on the distribution of good and evil here below, I find that much has been given man to enjoy, yet still more to suffer. Though we should examine 5 the whole world, we shall not find one man so happy as to have nothing left to wish for; but we daily see thousands who, by suicide, show us they have nothing left to hope. In this life, then, it appears that we cannot be entirely blest, but yet we may be completely
10 miserable.

Why man should thus feel pain; why our wretchedness should be requisite in the formation of universal felicity; why, when all other systems are made perfect by the perfection of their subordinate parts, the great 15 system should require for its perfection parts that are not only subordinate to others, but imperfect in themselves, — these are questions that never can be explained, and might be useless if known. On this subject, Providence has thought fit to elude our curiosity, satisfied with granting us motives to consolation.

In this situation man has called in the friendly assistance of philosophy, and Heaven, seeing the incapacity of that to console him, has given him the aid of religion. The consolations of philosophy are very amusing, but often fallacious. It tells us that life is filled with comforts, if we will but enjoy them; and, on the other hand, that though we unavoidably have miseries here, life is short, and they will soon be over. Thus do these consolations destroy each other; for, if life is a place of comfort, its shortness must be misery, and if it be long, our griefs are protracted. Thus philosophy is weak; but religion comforts in a higher strain. Man is here, it tells us, fitting up his mind, and preparing it for another abode. When the good man leaves the body and is all a glorious mind, he will find he has been making himself a heaven of happiness here; while the wretch that has been maimed and contaminated by his vices, shrinks from his body with terror, and finds that he has anticipated the vengeance of heaven. To religion then we must hold in every circumstance of life for our truest comfort; for if already we are happy, it is a pleasure to think that we can make that happiness unending; and if we are miserable, it is very consoling to think that there is a place of rest. Thus, to the fortunate, religion holds out a continuance of bliss; to the wretched, a change from pain.

But though religion is very kind to all men, it has promised peculiar rewards to the unhappy: the sick, the naked, the houseless, the heavy-laden, and the prisoner have ever most frequent promises in our sacred law.

5 The author of our religion everywhere professes himself the wretch's friend, and, unlike the false ones of this world, bestows all his caresses upon the forlorn. The unthinking have censured this as partiality, as a preference without merit to deserve it. But they never reflect

10 that it is not in the power even of Heaven itself to make the offer of unceasing felicity as great a gift to the happy as to the miserable. To the first, eternity is but a single blessing, since at most it but increases what they already possess. To the latter it is a double

15 advantage; for it diminishes their pain here, and rewards them with heavenly bliss hereafter.

But Providence is in another respect kinder to the poor than the rich; for as it thus makes the life after death more desirable, so it smooths the passage there.

20 The wretched have had a long familiarity with every face of terror. The man of sorrows lays himself quietly down, without possessions to regret, and but few ties to stop his departure: he feels only nature's pang in the final separation, and this is no way greater than he has 25 often fainted under before; for after a certain degree of pain, every new breach that death opens in the constitution, nature kindly covers with insensibility.

Thus Providence has given the wretched two advantages over the happy in this life, — greater felicity in dying, and in heaven all that superiority of pleasure which arises from contrasted enjoyment. And this superiority, my friends, is no small advantage, and seems to be one of the pleasures of the poor man in the parable; for though he was already in heaven, and 5 felt all the raptures it could give, yet it was mentioned as an addition to his happiness, that he had once been wretched, and now was comforted; that he had known what it was to be miserable, and now felt what it was to be happy. 10

Thus, my friends, you see religion does what philosophy could never do,—it shows the equal dealings of Heaven to the happy and the unhappy, and levels all human enjoyments to nearly the same standard. It gives to both rich and poor the same happiness here- 15 after, and equal hopes to aspire after it; but if the rich have the advantage of enjoying pleasure here, the poor have the endless satisfaction of knowing what it was once to be miserable, when crowned with endless felicity hereafter; and even though this should be called a 20 small advantage, yet being an eternal one, it must make up by duration what the temporal happiness of the great may have exceeded by intensesness.

These are, therefore, the consolations which the wretched have peculiar to themselves, and in which 25 they are above the rest of mankind; in other respects, they are below them. They who would know the miseries of the poor, must see life and endure it. To de-claim on the temporal advantages they enjoy is only repeating what none either believe or practise. The men who have the necessaries of living are not poor, and they who want them must be miserable. Yes, my friends, we must be miserable. No vain efforts of a refined imagination can soothe the wants of nature, can give elastic sweetness to the dank vapor of a dungeon, or ease to the throbbings of a broken heart. Let the philosopher from his couch of softness tell us that we can resist all these. Alas! the effort by which we resist them is still the greatest pain. Death is slight, and any man may sustain it; but torments are dreadful, and these no man can endure.

To us, then, my friends, the promises of happiness in heaven should be peculiarly dear; for if our reward be in this life alone, we are then indeed of all men the most miserable. When I look round these gloomy walls, made to terrify as well as to confine us; this light, that only serves to show the horrors of the place; those shackles, that tyranny has imposed, or crime made necessary; when I survey these emaciated looks, and hear those groans, O, my friends, what a glorious exchange would heaven be for these! To fly through regions unconfined as air, to bask in the sunshine of eternal bliss, to carol over endless hymns of praise, to have no master to threaten or insult us, but the form of Goodness himself forever in our eyes! when I think of these things, death becomes the messenger of very glad tidings; when I think of these things, his sharpest arrow becomes the staff of my support; when I think of these things, what is there in life worth having? when I think of these things, what is there that should not be spurned away? Kings in their palaces should groan for such advantages; but we, humbled as we are, should yearn for them.

5

And shall these things be ours? Ours they will certainly be if we but try for them; and what is a comfort, we are shut out from many temptations that would retard our pursuit. Only let us try for them, and they will certainly be ours; and what is still a comfort, 10 shortly too; for if we look back on a past life, it appears but a very short span, and whatever we may think of the rest of life, it will yet be found of less duration. As we grow older, the days seem to grow shorter, and our intimacy with time ever lessens the perception of 15 his stay. Then let us take comfort now, for we shall soon be at our journey's end; we shall soon lay down the heavy burden laid by Heaven upon us; and though death, the only friend of the wretched, for a little while mocks the weary traveller with the view, and like his 20 horizon still flies before him, yet the time will certainly and shortly come when we shall cease from our toil; when the luxurious great ones of the world shall no more tread us to the earth; when we shall think with pleasure of our sufferings below; when we shall be 25 surrounded with our friends, or such as deserved our friendship; when our bliss shall be unutterable, and still, to crown all. unending.

CHAPTER XXX.

HAPPIER PROSPECTS BEGIN TO APPEAR. — LET US BE INFLEXIBLE, AND FORTUNE WILL AT LAST CHANGE IN OUR FAVOR.

WHEN I had thus finished, and my audience was retired, the jailer, who was one of the most humane of his profession, hoped I would not be displeased, as what he did was but his duty, observing, that he must be 5 obliged to remove my son into a stronger cell, but that he should be permitted to revisit me every morning. I thanked him for his clemency, and grasping my boy's hand, bade him farewell, and be mindful of the great duty that was before him.

10 I again therefore laid me down, and one of my little ones sat by my bedside reading, when Mr. Jenkinson entering, informed me that there was news of my daughter; for that she was seen by a person about two hours before in a strange gentleman's company; and 15 that they had stopt at a neighboring village for refreshment, and seemed as if returning to town. He had scarcely delivered this news when the jailer came with looks of haste and pleasure to inform me that my daughter was found. Moses came running in a moment
20 after, crying out that his sister Sophy was below, and coming up with our old friend Mr. Burchell.

Just as he delivered this news, my dearest girl entered, and with looks almost wild with pleasure, ran to kiss me in a transport of affection. Her mother's tears and silence also showed her pleasure. "Here, papa," cried the charming girl, "here is the brave man to whom I owe my delivery; to this gentleman's intrepidity I am indebted for my happiness and safety" — A kiss from Mr. Burchell, whose pleasure seemed even greater than hers, interrupted what she was going to add.

"Ah, Mr. Burchell," cried I, "this is but a wretched habitation you now find us in; and we are now very different from what you last saw us. You were ever our friend; we have long discovered our errors with regard to you, and repented of our ingratitude. After the vile usage you then received at our hands, I am almost ashamed to behold your face; yet I hope you'll forgive me, as I was deceived by a base, ungenerous wretch, who under the mask of friendship has undone me."

"It is impossible," cried Mr. Burchell, "that I should forgive you, as you never deserved my resentment. I partly saw your delusion then, and as it was out of my power to restrain, I could only pity it."

"It was ever my conjecture," cried I, "that your mind was noble, but now I find 'it so. But tell me, my dear child, how thou hast been relieved, or who the ruffians were who carried thee away."

"Indeed, sir," replied she, "as to the villain who carried me off, I am yet ignorant. For, as my mamma and I were walking out, he came behind us, and almost before I could call for help, forced me into the post-chaise, and in an instant the horses drove away. I met several on the road, to whom I cried out for assistance, 5 but they disregarded my entreaties. In the meantime the ruffian himself used every art to hinder me from crying out; he flattered and threatened by turns, and swore that if I continued but silent he intended me no harm. In the meantime I had broken the canvas 10 that he had drawn up, and whom should I perceive at some distance but your old friend Mr. Burchell, walking along with his usual swiftness, with the great stick, for which we used so much to ridicule him. As soon as we came within hearing, I called out to him by name, 15 and entreated his help. I repeated my exclamations several times, upon which with a very loud voice he bid the postilion stop; but the boy took no notice, but drove on with still greater speed. I now thought he could never overtake us, when, in less than a minute, 20 I saw Mr. Burchell come running up by the side of the horses, and with one blow knock the postilion to the ground. The horses, when he was fallen, soon stopt of themselves, and the ruffian stepping out, with oaths and menaces drew his sword, and ordered him at his 25 peril to retire; but Mr. Burchell running up, shivered his sword to pieces, and then pursued him for near a quarter of a mile; but he made his escape. I was at this time come out myself, willing to assist my deliverer; but he soon returned to me in triumph. The postilion, who was recovered, was going to make his escape too; but Mr. Burchell ordered him at his peril to mount again and drive back to town. Finding it impossible to resist, he reluctantly complied, though the wound he had received seemed to me at least to be dangerous. He 5 continued to complain of the pain as we drove along, so that he at last excited Mr. Burchell's compassion, who at my request exchanged him for another at an inn where we called on our return."

"Welcome, then," cried I, "my child! and thou, her 10 gallant deliverer, a thousand welcomes! Though our cheer is but wretched, yet our hearts are ready to receive you. And now, Mr. Burchell, as you have delivered my girl, if you think her a recompense, she is yours; if you can stoop to an alliance with a family 15 so poor as mine, take her, obtain her consent, as I know you have her heart, and you have mine. And let me tell you, sir, that I give you no small treasure. She has been celebrated for beauty, it is true, but that is not my meaning; I give you up a treasure in her mind." 20

"But I suppose, sir," cried Mr. Burchell, "that you are apprised of my circumstances, and of my incapacity to support her as she deserves?"

"If your present objections," replied I, "be meant as an evasion of my offer, I desist; but I know no man 25 so worthy to deserve her as you, and if I could give her thousands, and thousands sought her from me, yet my honest, brave Burchell should be my dearest choice."

To all this his silence alone seemed to give a mortifying refusal, and without the least reply to my offer, he demanded if he could not be furnished with refreshments from the next inn; to which being answered in the affirmative, he ordered them to send in the best

5 dinner that could be provided upon such short notice. He bespoke also a dozen of their best wine, and some cordials for me; adding, with a smile, that he would stretch a little for once, and, though in a prison, asserted he was never better disposed to be merry. The waiter 10 soon made his appearance, with preparations for dinner: a table was lent us by the jailer, who seemed remarkably assiduous; the wine was disposed in order, and two very well-dressed dishes were brought in.

My daughter had not yet heard of her poor brother's 15 melancholy situation, and we all seemed unwilling to damp her cheerfulness by the relation. But it was in vain that I attempted to appear cheerful; the circumstances of my unfortunate son broke through all efforts to dissemble, so that I was at last obliged to damp our mirth
20 by relating his misfortunes, and wishing that he might be permitted to share with us in this little interval of satisfaction. After my guests were recovered from the consternation my account had produced, I requested also that Mr. Jenkinson, a fellow-prisoner, might be 25 admitted; and the jailer granted my request with an air of unusual submission. The clanking of my son's irons was no sooner heard along the passage, than his sister ran impatiently to meet him; while Mr. Burchell, in the meantime, asked me if my son's name was George;

to which replying in the affirmative, he still continued silent. As soon as my boy entered the room, I could perceive he regarded Mr. Burchell with a look of astonishment and reverence. "Come on," cried I, "my son; though we are fallen very low, yet Providence has been pleased to grant us some small relaxation from pain. Thy sister is restored to us, and there is her deliverer; to that brave man it is that I am indebted for yet having a daughter. Give him, my boy, the hand of friendship; he deserves our warmest gratitude." 5 10

My son seemed all this while regardless of what I said, and still continued fixed at respectful distance. "My dear brother," cried his sister, "why don't you thank my good deliverer? The brave should ever love each other." 15

He still continued his silence and astonishment, till our guest at last perceived himself to be known, and assuming all his native dignity, desired my son to come forward. Never before had I seen anything so truly majestic as the air he assumed upon this occasion. The greatest object in the universe, says a certain philosopher, is a good man struggling with adversity; yet there is still a greater, which is the good man that comes to relieve it. After he had regarded my son for some time with a superior air, "I again find," said he, "un-25 thinking boy, that the same crime" — But here he was interrupted by one of the jailer's servants, who came to inform us that a person of distinction, who had driven into town with a chariot and several attendants, sent his respects to the gentleman that was with us, and begged to know when he should think proper to be waited upon. "Bid the fellow wait," cried our guest, "till I shall have leisure to receive him;" and then turning to my 5 son, "I again find, sir," proceeded he, "that you are guilty of the same offence for which you once had my reproof, and for which the law is now preparing its justest punishments. You imagine, perhaps, that a con-

10 tempt for your own life gives you a right to take that of another; but where, sir, is the difference between a duellist who hazards a life of no value, and the murderer who acts with greater security? Is it any diminution of the gamester's fraud, when he alleges that he has staked a counter?"

15 "Alas, sir!" cried I, "whoever you are, pity the poor misguided creature; for what he has done was in obedience to a deluded mother, who, in the bitterness of her resentment, required him upon her blessing to avenge her quarrel. Here, sir, is the letter, which will serve 20 to convince you of her imprudence, and diminish his guilt."

He took the letter, and hastily read it over. "This," says he, "though not a perfect excuse, is such a palliation of his fault as induces me to forgive him. And 25 now, sir," continued he, kindly taking my son by the hand, "I see you are surprised at finding me here; but I have often visited prisons upon occasions less interesting. I am now come to see justice done a worthy man, for whom I have the most sincere esteem. I have long been a disguised spectator of thy father's benevolence. I have at his little dwelling enjoyed respect uncontaminated by flattery; and have received that happiness that courts could not give, from the amusing simplicity round his fireside. My nephew has been apprised of my intentions in coming here, and I find is arrived. It would be wronging him and you to condemn him without examination; if there be injury, there shall be redress; and this I may say without boasting, that none have ever taxed the injustice of Sir William Thornhill." 10

We now found the personage whom we had so long entertained as a harmless amusing companion, was no other than the celebrated Sir William Thornhill, to whose virtues and singularities scarcely any were strangers. The poor Mr. Burchell was in reality a man of large fortune and great interest, to whom senates listened with applause, and whom party heard with conviction; who was the friend of his country, but loyal to his king. My poor wife, recollecting her former familiarity, seemed to shrink with apprehension; but Sophia, who a few moments before thought him her own, now perceiving the immense distance to which he was removed by fortune, was unable to conceal her tears.

"Ah, sir," cried my wife with a piteous aspect, "how is it possible that I can ever have your forgiveness? The slights you received from me the last time I had the honor of seeing you at our house, and the jokes which I audaciously threw out — these jokes, sir, I fear, can never be forgiven."

“My dear good lady,” returned he with a smile, “if you had your joke, I had my answer; I’ll leave it to all the company if mine were not as good as yours. To say the truth, I know nobody whom I am disposed to be
5 angry with at present but the fellow who so frightened my little girl here. I had not even time to examine the rascal’s person so as to describe him in an advertisement. Can you tell me, Sophia, my dear, whether you should know him again?”

10 “Indeed, sir,” replied she, “I can’t be positive; yet now I recollect he had a large mark over one of his eyebrows.” — “I ask pardon, madam,” interrupted Jenkinson, who was by, “but be so good as to inform me if the fellow wore his own red hair?” — “Yes, I think
15 so,” cried Sophia. “And did your honor,” continued he, turning to Sir William, “observe the length of his legs?” — “I can’t be sure of their length,” cried the Baronet, “but I am convinced of their swiftness; for he outran me, which is what I thought few men in the 20 kingdom could have done.” — “Please, your honor,” cried Jenkinson, “I know the man: it is certainly the same; the best runner in England. He has beaten Pinwire of Newcastle; Timothy Baxter is his name. I know him perfectly, and the very place of his retreat this moment.
25 If your honor will bid Mr. Jailer let two of his men go with me, I’ll engage to produce him to you in an hour at farthest.” Upon this the jailer was called, who instantly appearing, Sir William demanded if he knew him. “Yes, please your honor,” replied the jailer, “I know Sir William Thornhill well; and everybody that knows anything of him will desire to know more of him." — "Well, then," said the Baronet, "my request is that you will permit this man and two of your servants to go upon a message by my authority; and as I am in 5 the commission of the peace, I undertake to secure you." — "Your promise is sufficient," replied the other, "and you may at a moment's warning send them over England whenever your honor thinks fit."

In pursuance of the jailer's compliance, Jenkinson 10 was despatched in search of Timothy Baxter, while we were amused with the assiduity of our youngest boy, Bill, who had just come in and climbed up Sir William's neck in order to kiss him. His mother was immediately going to chastise his familiarity, but the worthy man 15 prevented her; and taking the child, all ragged as he was, upon his knee, "What, Bill, you chubby rogue," cried he, "do you remember your old friend Burchell? and Dick too, my honest veteran, are you here? You shall find I have not forgot you." So saying, he gave 20 each a large piece of gingerbread, which the poor fellows ate very heartily, as they had got that morning but a very scanty breakfast.

We now sate down to dinner, which was almost cold; but previously, my arm still continuing painful, Sir 25 William wrote a prescription; for he had made the study of physic his amusement, and was more than moderately skilled in the profession. This being sent to an apothecary who lived in the place, my arm was dressed, and

I found almost instantaneous relief. We were waited upon at dinner by the jailer himself, who was willing to do our guest all the honor in his power. But before we had well dined, another message was brought from his 5 nephew, desiring permission to appear in order to vindicate his innocence and honor; with which request the Baronet complied, and desired Mr. Thornhill to be introduced.

CHAPTER XXXI.

FORMER BENEVOLENCE NOW REPAID WITH UNEX-PECTED INTEREST.

MR. THORNHILL made his appearance with a smile, which he seldom wanted, and was going to embrace his uncle, which the other repulsed with an air of disdain. "No fawning, sir, at present," cried the Baronet, with a look of severity; "the only way to my heart is by the 5 road of honor; but here I only see complicated instances of falsehood, cowardice, and oppression. How is it, sir, that this poor man, for whom I know you professed a friendship, is used thus hardly? His daughter vilely seduced as a recompense for his hospitality, and he 10 himself thrown into prison, perhaps but for resenting the insult? His son, too, whom you feared to face as a man" —

"Is it possible, sir," interrupted his nephew, "that my uncle could object that as a crime which his repeated 15 instructions alone have persuaded me to avoid?"

"Your rebuke," cried Sir William, "is just; you have acted in this instance prudently and well, though not quite as your father would have done. My brother, indeed, was the soul of honor; but thou — Yes, you 20 have acted, in this instance, perfectly right, and it has my warmest approbation."

“And I hope,” said his nephew, “that the rest of my conduct will not be found to deserve censure. I appeared, sir, with this gentleman’s daughter at some places of public amusement; thus, what was levity, 5 scandal called by a harsher name, and it was reported that I had debauched her. I waited on her father in person, willing to clear the thing to his satisfaction, and he received me only with insult and abuse. As for the rest, with regard to his being here, my attorney and 10 steward can best inform you, as I commit the management of business entirely to them. If he has contracted debts, and is unwilling, or even unable, to pay them, it is their business to proceed in this manner; and I see no hardship or injustice in pursuing the most legal means 15 of redress.”

“If this,” cried Sir William, “be as you have stated it, there is nothing unpardonable in your offence; and though your conduct might have been more generous in not suffering this gentleman to be oppressed by subordi- 20 nate tyranny, yet it has been at least equitable.”

“He cannot contradict a single particular,” replied the Squire. “I defy him to do so; and several of my servants are ready to attest what I say. Thus, sir,” continued he, finding that I was silent, for in fact I could 25 not contradict him, “thus, sir, my own innocence is vindicated; but though at your entreaty I am ready to forgive this gentleman every other offence, yet his attempts to lessen me in your esteem excite a resentment that I cannot govern, and this, too, at a time when his son was actually preparing to take away my life. This, I say, was such guilt, that I am determined to let the law take its course. I have here the challenge that was sent me, and two witnesses to prove it. One of my servants has been wounded dangerously ; and even though 5 my uncle himself should dissuade me, which I know he will not, yet I will see public justice done, and he shall suffer for it."

"Thou monster !" cried my wife, "hast thou not had vengeance enough already, but must my poor boy feel 10 thy cruelty ? I hope that good Sir William will protect us, for my son is as innocent as a child ; I am sure he is, and never did harm to man."

"Madam," replied the good man, "your wishes for his safety are not greater than mine ; but I am sorry to 15 find his guilt too plain, and if my nephew persists" — But the appearance of Jenkinson and the jailer's two servants now called off our attention, who entered, hauling in a tall man, very genteelly dressed, and answering the description already given of the ruffian who had 20 carried off my daughter. "Here," cried Jenkinson, pulling him in, "here we have him ; and if ever there was a candidate for Tyburn, this is one."

The moment Mr. Thornhill perceived the prisoner and Jenkinson who had him in custody, he seemed to shrink 25 back with terror. His face became pale with conscious guilt, and he would have withdrawn ; but Jenkinson, who perceived his design, stopt him. "What, Squire," cried he, "are you ashamed of your two old acquaintances, Jenkinson and Baxter? But this is the way that all great men forget their friends, though I am resolved we will not forget you. Our prisoner, please your honor," continued he, turning to Sir William, "has already 5 confessed all. This is the gentleman reported to be so dangerously wounded. He declares that it was Mr. Thornhill who first put him upon this affair; that he gave him the clothes he now wears, to appear like a gentleman, and furnished him with the post-chaise. The 10 plan was laid between them, that he should carry off the young lady to a place of safety, and that there he should threaten and terrify her; but Mr. Thornhill was to come in, in the meantime, as if by accident, to her rescue, and that they should fight a while, and then he 15 was to run off, — by which Mr. Thornhill would have the better opportunity of gaining her affections himself, under the character of her defender."

Sir William remembered the coat to have been worn by his nephew, and all the rest the prisoner himself 20 confirmed by a more circumstantial account; concluding, that Mr. Thornhill had often declared to him that he was in love with both sisters at the same time.

"Heavens!" cried Sir William, "what a viper have I been fostering in my bosom! And so fond of public 25 justice, too, as he seemed to be! But he shall have it! Secure him, Mr. Jailer! — yet, hold; I fear there is not legal evidence to detain him."

Upon this Mr. Thornhill, with the utmost humility, entreated that two such abandoned wretches might not be admitted as evidences against him, but that his servants should be examined. "Your servants!" replied Sir William; "wretch! call them yours no longer; but come, let us hear what those fellows have to say; let his butler be called."

5

When the butler was introduced, he soon perceived by his former master's looks that all his power was now over. "Tell me," cried Sir William sternly, "have you ever seen your master, and that fellow dressed up in his clothes, in company together?" — "Yes, please your honor," cried the butler; "a thousand times: he was the man that always brought him his ladies." — "How," interrupted young Mr. Thornhill, "this to my face!" — "Yes," replied the butler; "or to any man's face. To tell you a truth, Master Thornhill, I never either loved or liked you, and I don't care if I tell you now a piece of my mind." — "Now, then," cried Jenkinson, "tell his honor whether you know anything of me." — "I can't say," replied the butler, "that I know much good of you. The night that gentleman's daughter was deluded to our house, you were one of them." — "So, then," cried Sir William, "I find you have brought a very fine witness to prove your innocence, thou stain to humanity! to associate with such wretches! But," continuing his examination, "you tell me, Mr. Butler, that this was the person who brought him this old gentleman's daughter." — "No, please your honor," replied the butler, "he did not bring her, for the Squire himself undertook that business; but he brought the priest that pretended to marry them." — "It is but too true," cried Jenkinson; "I cannot deny it; that was the employment assigned to me, and I confess it to my confusion."

20

25

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the Baronet, "how every 5 new discovery of his villany alarms me! All his guilt is now too plain, and I find his prosecution was dictated by tyranny, cowardice, and revenge. At my request, Mr. Jailer, set this young officer, now your prisoner, free, and trust to me for the consequences. I'll make 10 it my business to set the affair in a proper light to my friend the magistrate, who has committed him. But where is the unfortunate young lady herself? Let her appear to confront this wretch; I long to know by what arts he has seduced her. Entreat her to come in.
15 Where is she?"

"Ah, sir," said I, "that question stings me to the heart; I was once indeed happy in a daughter, but her miseries" — Another interruption here prevented me; for who should make her appearance but Miss Arabella 20 Wilmot, who was next day to have been married to Mr. Thornhill! Nothing could equal her surprise at seeing Sir William and his nephew here before her; for her arrival was quite accidental. It happened that she and the old gentleman, her father, were passing through the 25 town on their way to her aunt's, who had insisted that her nuptials with Mr. Thornhill should be consummated at her house; but stopping for refreshment, they put up at an inn at the other end of the town. It was there, from the window, that the young lady happened to observe one of my little boys playing in the street, and instantly sending a footman to bring the child to her, she learnt from him some account of our misfortunes; but was still kept ignorant of young Mr. Thornhill's being the cause. Though her father made several remonstrances on the impropriety of going to a prison to visit us, yet they were ineffectual; she desired the child to conduct her, which he did, and it was thus she surprised us at a juncture so unexpected.

Nor can I go on without a reflection on those accidental meetings, which, though they happen every day, seldom excite our surprise but upon some extraordinary occasion. To what a fortuitous concurrence do we not owe every pleasure and convenience of our lives! How many seeming accidents must unite before we can be clothed or fed! The peasant must be disposed to labor, the shower must fall, the wind fill the merchant's sail, or numbers must want the usual supply.

We all continued silent for some moments, while my charming pupil, which was the name I generally gave this young lady, united in her looks compassion and astonishment, which gave new finishings to her beauty. "Indeed, my dear Mr. Thornhill," cried she to the Squire, who she supposed was come here to succor, and not to oppress us, "I take it a little unkindly that you should come here without me, or never inform me of the situation of a family so dear to us both: you know I should take as much pleasure in contributing to the relief of my reverend old master here, whom I shall ever esteem, as you can. But I find that, like your uncle, you take a pleasure in doing good in secret."

"He find pleasure in doing good!" cried Sir William, interrupting her. "No, my dear; his pleasures are as 5 base as he is. You see in him, madam, as complete a villain as ever disgraced humanity. A wretch who, after having deluded this poor man's daughter, after plotting against the innocence of her sister, has thrown the father into prison, and the eldest son into fetters
10 because he had the courage to face her betrayer. And give me leave, madam, now to congratulate you upon an escape from the embraces of such a monster."

"Oh, goodness!" cried the lovely girl, "how have I been deceived! Mr. Thornhill informed me for certain 15 that this gentleman's eldest son, Captain Primrose, was gone off to America with his new-married lady."

"My sweet miss," cried my wife, "he has told you nothing but falsehoods. My son George never left the kingdom, nor ever was married. Though you have 20 forsaken him, he has always loved you too well to think of anybody else; and I have heard him say he would die a bachelor for your sake." She then proceeded to expatiate upon the sincerity of her son's passion. She set his duel with Mr. Thornhill in a proper light; from 25 thence she made a rapid digression to the Squire's debaucheries, his pretended marriages, and ended with a most insulting picture of his cowardice.

"Good Heaven!" cried Miss Wilmot, "how very near have I been to the brink of ruin! Ten thousand falsehoods has this gentleman told me. He had at last art enough to persuade me that my promise to the only man I esteemed was no longer binding, since he had been unfaithful. By his falsehoods I was taught to detest one equally brave and generous." 5

By this time my son was freed from the incumbrances of justice, as the person supposed to be wounded was detected to be an impostor. Mr. Jenkinson also, who had acted as his valet de chambre, had dressed up his hair, and furnished him with whatever was necessary to make a genteel appearance. He now, therefore, entered handsomely dressed in his regimentals; and without vanity (for I am above it), he appeared as handsome a fellow as ever wore a military dress. As he entered he made Miss Wilmot a modest and distant bow; for he 15 was not as yet acquainted with the change which the eloquence of his mother had wrought in his favor. But no decorums could restrain the impatience of his blushing mistress to be forgiven. Her tears, her looks, all contributed to discover the real sensations of her heart, 20 for having forgotten her former promise, and having suffered herself to be deluded by an impostor. My son appeared amazed at her condescension, and could scarcely believe it real. "Sure, madam," cried he, "this is but delusion! I can never have merited this? To 25 be blessed thus is to be too happy." — "No, sir," replied she; "I have been deceived, basely deceived, else nothing could have ever made me unjust to my promise. You know my friendship, you have long known it; but forget what I have done, and as you once had my warmest vows of constancy, you shall now have them repeated; and be assured, that if your Arabella cannot be yours, she shall never be another's." — "And no

5 other's you shall be," cried Sir William, "if I have any influence with your father."

This hint was sufficient for my son Moses, who immediately flew to the inn where the old gentleman was, to inform him of every circumstance that had happened.
10 But in the meantime the Squire, perceiving that he was on every side undone, now finding that no hopes were left from flattery or dissimulation, concluded that his wisest way would be to turn and face his pursuers. Thus, laying aside all shame, he appeared the open, hardy
15 villain. "I find, then," cried he, "that I am to expect no justice here; but I am resolved it shall be done me. You shall know, sir," turning to Sir William, "I am no longer a poor dependent upon your favors; I scorn them. Nothing can keep Miss Wilmot's fortune from 20 me, which, I thank her father's assiduity, is pretty large. The articles and a bond for her fortune are signed, and safe in my possession. It was her fortune, not her person, that induced me to wish for this match; and possessed of the one, let who will take the other."

25 This was an alarming blow. Sir William was sensible of the justice of his claims, for he had been instrumental in drawing up the marriage articles himself. Miss Wilmot, therefore, perceiving that her fortune was irretrievably lost, turning to my son, she asked if the loss of fortune could lessen her value to him ? “Though fortune,” said she, “is out of my power, at least I have my hand to give.”

“And that, madam,” cried her real lover, “was indeed all that you ever had to give; at least all that I ever 5 thought worth the acceptance. And I now protest, my Arabella, by all that’s happy, your want of fortune this moment increases my pleasure, as it serves to convince my sweet girl of my sincerity.”

Mr. Wilmot now entering, he seemed not a little 10 pleased at the danger his daughter had just escaped, and readily consented to a dissolution of the match. But finding that her fortune, which was secured to Mr. Thornhill by bond, would not be given up, nothing could exceed his disappointment. He now saw that his money 15 must all go to enrich one who had no fortune of his own. He could bear his being a rascal, but to want an equivalent to his daughter’s fortune was wormwood. He sat therefore for some minutes employed in the most mortifying speculations, till Sir William attempted to lessen 20 his anxiety. “I must confess, sir,” cried he, “that your present disappointment does not entirely displease me. Your immoderate passion for wealth is now justly punished. But though the young lady cannot be rich, she has still a competence sufficient to give content. Here 25 you see an honest young soldier, who is willing to take her without fortune: they have long loved each other; and for the friendship I bear his father, my interest shall not be wanting in his promotion. Leave, then, that ambition which disappoints you, and for once admit that happiness which courts your acceptance."

"Sir William," replied the old gentleman, "be assured I never yet forced her inclinations, nor will I now. If 5 she still continues to love this young gentleman, let her have him with all my heart. There is still, thank Heaven, some fortune left, and your promise will make it something more. Only let my old friend here (meaning me) give me a promise of settling six thousand 10 pounds upon my girl, if ever he should come to his fortune, and I am ready this night to be the first to join them together."

As it now remained with me to make the young couple happy, I readily gave a promise of making the 15 settlement he required, which to one who had such little expectations as I, was no great favor. We had now therefore the satisfaction of seeing them fly into each other's arms in transport. "After all my misfortunes," cried my son George, "to be thus rewarded! Sure this 20 is more than I could ever have presumed to hope for. To be possessed of all that's good, and after such an interval of pain! My warmest wishes could never rise so high!"

"Yes, my George," returned his lovely bride, "now 25 let the wretch take my fortune; since you are happy without it, so am I. Oh, what an exchange have I made from the basest of men to the dearest, best! Let him enjoy our fortune; I now can be happy even in indigence." — "And I promise you," cried the Squire, with a malicious grin, "that I shall be very happy with what you despise." — "Hold, hold, sir," cried Jenkinson, "there are two words to that bargain. As for that lady's fortune, sir, you shall never touch a single stiver of it. Pray, your honor," continued he to Sir William, "can 5 the Squire have this lady's fortune if he be married to another?" — "How can you make such a simple demand?" replied the Baronet; "undoubtedly he cannot." — "I am sorry for that," cried Jenkinson; "for as this gentleman and I have been old fellow-sporters, 10 I have a friendship for him. But I must declare, well as I love him, that this contract is not worth a tobacco-stopper, for he is married already." — "You lie, like a rascal," returned the Squire, who seemed roused by this insult. "I never was legally married to any woman." 15

"Indeed, begging your honor's pardon," replied the other, "you were; and I hope you will show a proper return of friendship to your own honest Jenkinson, who brings you a wife; and if the company restrain their curiosity a few minutes, they shall see her." So say- 20 ing, he went off with his usual celerity, and left us all unable to form any probable conjecture as to his design. "Ay, let him go," cried the Squire; "whatever else I may have done, I defy him there. I am too old now to be frightened with squibs." 25

"I am surprised," said the Baronet, "what the fellow can intend by this. Some low piece of humor, I suppose." — "Perhaps, sir," replied I, "he may have a more serious meaning. For when we reflect on the various schemes this gentleman has laid to seduce innocence, perhaps some one, more artful than the rest, has been found able to deceive him. When we consider what numbers he has ruined, how many parents now

5 feel with anguish the infamy and the contamination which he has brought into their families, it would not surprise me if some one of them — Amazement! Do I see my lost daughter? do I hold her? It is, it is my life, my happiness! I thought thee lost, my Olivia, yet
10 still I hold thee — and still thou shalt live to bless me.” The warmest transports of the fondest lover were not greater than mine, when I saw him introduce my child, and held my daughter in my arms, whose silence only spoke her raptures.

15 “And art thou returned to me, my darling,” cried I, “to be my comfort in age?” — “That she is!” cried Jenkinson; “and make much of her, for she is your own honorable child, and as honest a woman as any in the whole room, let the other be who she will. And as 20 for you, Squire, as sure as you stand there this young lady is your lawful wedded wife. And to convince you that I speak nothing but truth, here is the license by which you were married together.” So saying, he put the license into the Baronet’s hands, who read it, and 25 found it perfect in every respect. “And now, gentlemen,” continued he, “I find you are surprised at all this; but a few words will explain the difficulty. That there Squire of renown, for whom I have a great friendship (but that’s between ourselves), has often employed me in doing odd little things for him. Among the rest, he commissioned me to procure him a false license and a false priest, in order to deceive this young lady. But as I was very much his friend, what did I do, but went and got a true license and a true priest, and married them 5 both as fast as the cloth could make them. Perhaps you'll think it was generosity that made me do all this. But no; to my shame I confess it, my only design was to keep the license, and let the Squire know that I could prove it upon him whenever I thought proper, and so 10 make him come down whenever I wanted money." A burst of pleasure now seemed to fill the whole apartment; our joy reached even to the common room, where the prisoners themselves sympathized,

And shook their chains 15
In transport and rude harmony.

Happiness was expanded upon every face, and even Olivia's cheek seemed flushed with pleasure. To be thus restored to reputation, to friends and fortune at once, was a rapture sufficient to stop the progress of de- 20 cay, and restore former health and vivacity. But perhaps among all there was not one who felt sincerer pleasure than I. Still holding the dear loved child in my arms, I asked my heart if these transports were not delusion. "How could you," cried I, turning to Mr. Jen- 25 kinson, "how could you add to my miseries by the story of her death? But it matters not; my pleasure at finding her again is more than a recompense for the pain."

“As to your question,” replied Jenkinson, “that is easily answered. I thought the only probable means of freeing you from prison, was by submitting to the Squire, and consenting to his marriage with the other
5 young lady. But these you had vowed never to grant while your daughter was living; there was, therefore, no other method to bring things to bear, but by persuading you that she was dead. I prevailed on your wife to join in the deceit, and we have not had a fit opportunity of 10 undeceiving you till now.”

In the whole assembly there now appeared only two faces that did not glow with transport. Mr. Thornhill’s assurance had entirely forsaken him; he now saw the gulf of infamy and want before him, and trembled to 15 take the plunge. He therefore fell on his knees before his uncle, and in a voice of piercing misery implored compassion. Sir William was going to spurn him away, but at my request he raised him, and after pausing a few moments, “Thy vices, crimes, and ingratitude,” 20 cried he, “deserve no tenderness; yet thou shalt not be entirely forsaken — a bare competence shall be supplied to support the wants of life, but not its follies. This young lady, thy wife, shall be put in possession of a third part of that fortune which once was thine, and 25 from her tenderness alone thou art to expect any extraordinary supplies for the future.” He was going to express his gratitude for such kindness in a set speech; but the Baronet prevented him, by bidding him not to aggravate his meanness, which was already but too apparent. He ordered him at the time to be gone, and from all his former domestics to choose one, such as he should think proper, which was all that should be granted to attend him.

As soon as he left us, Sir William very politely 5 stepped up to his new niece with a smile, and wished her joy. His example was followed by Miss Wilmot and her father. My wife, too, kissed her daughter with much affection; as, to use her own expression, she was now made an honest woman of. Sophia and Moses 10 followed in turn, and even our benefactor Jenkinson desired to be admitted to that honor. Our satisfaction seemed scarcely capable of increase. Sir William, whose greatest pleasure was in doing good, now looked round with a countenance open as the sun, and saw nothing 15 but joy in the looks of all except that of my daughter Sophia, who, for some reasons we could not comprehend, did not seem perfectly satisfied. "I think now," cried he, with a smile, "that all the company except one or two seem perfectly happy. There only remains an act 20 of justice for me to do. You are sensible, sir," continued he, turning to me, "of the obligations we both owe Mr. Jenkinson, and it is but just that we should both reward him for it. Miss Sophia will, I am sure, make him very happy, and he shall have from me five hun- 25 dred pounds as her fortune; and upon this I am sure they can live very comfortably together. Come, Miss Sophia, what say you to this match of my making? Will you have him?" My poor girl seemed almost sinking into her mother's arms at the hideous proposal. "Have him, sir!" cried she faintly, "no, sir, never." — "What," cried he again, "not have Mr. Jenkinson, your benefactor, a handsome young fellow, with five hundred pounds, and good expectations?" — "I beg, sir," returned she, scarcely able to speak, "that you'll desist, and not make me so very wretched." — "Was ever such obstinacy known?" cried he again, "to refuse a man whom the family has such infinite obligations to, who has preserved your sister, and who has five hundred pounds! What, not have him!" — "No, sir, never," replied she angrily; "I'd sooner die first." — "If that be the case, then," cried he, "if you will not have him — I think I must have you myself." And so saying, he caught her to his breast with ardor. "My loveliest, my most sensible of girls," cried he, "how could you ever think your own Burchell could deceive you, or that Sir William Thornhill could ever cease to admire a mistress that loved him for himself alone? I have for some years sought for a woman who, a stranger to my fortune, could think that I had merit as a man. After having tried in vain, even amongst the pert and the ugly, how great at last must be my rapture to have made a conquest over such sense and such heavenly beauty!"

Then turning to Jenkinson: "As I cannot, sir, part with this young lady myself, for she has taken a fancy to the cut of my face, all the recompense I can make is to give you her fortune: and you may call upon my steward to-morrow for five hundred pounds." Thus we had all our compliments to repeat, and Lady Thornhill underwent the same round of ceremony that her sister had done before. In the meantime, Sir William's gentleman appeared to tell us that the equipages were ready to carry us to the inn, where everything was prepared for our reception. My wife and I led the van, and left those gloomy mansions of sorrow. The generous Baronet ordered forty pounds to be distributed among the prisoners, and Mr. Wilmot, induced by his example, gave half that sum. We were received below by the shouts of the villagers, and I saw and shook by the hand two or three of my honest parishioners, who were among the number. They attended us to our inn, where a sumptuous entertainment was provided, and coarser provisions were distributed in great quantities among the populace.

After supper, as my spirits were exhausted by the alternation of pleasure and pain which they had sustained during the day, I asked permission to withdraw; and leaving the company in the midst of their mirth, as soon as I found myself alone, I poured out my heart in gratitude to the Giver of joy as well as of sorrow, and then slept undisturbed till morning.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE CONCLUSION.

THE next morning, as soon as I awaked, I found my eldest son sitting by my bedside, who came to increase my joy with another turn of fortune in my favor. First having released me from the settlement that I had made
5 the day before in his favor, he let me know that my merchant, who had failed in town, was arrested at Antwerp, and there had given up effects to a much greater amount than what was due to his creditors. My boy's generosity pleased me almost as much as this unlooked-
10 for good fortune; but I had some doubts whether I ought in justice to accept his offer. While I was pondering upon this, Sir William entered my room, to whom I communicated my doubts. His opinion was, that as my son was already possessed of a very affluent fortune
15 by his marriage, I might accept his offer without any hesitation. His business, however, was to inform me that he had the night before sent for the licenses, and expected them every hour, and he hoped I would not refuse my assistance in making all the company happy 20 that morning. A footman entered while we were speaking, to tell us that the messenger was returned; and as I was by this time ready, I went down, where I found the whole company as merry as affluence and innocence could make them. However, as they were now preparing for a very solemn ceremony, their laughter entirely displeased me. I told them of the grave, becoming, and sublime deportment they should assume upon this mystical occasion, and read them two homilies, and a thesis 5 of my own composing, in order to prepare them. Yet they still seemed perfectly refractory and ungovernable. Even as we were going along to church, to which I led the way, all gravity had quite forsaken them, and I was often tempted to turn back in indignation. In church 10 a new dilemma arose, which promised no easy solution. This was, which couple should be married first. My son's bride warmly insisted that Lady Thornhill (that was to be) should take the lead; but this the other refused with equal ardor, protesting she would not be 15 guilty of such rudeness for the world. The argument was supported for some time between both with equal obstinacy and good breeding. But as I stood all this time with my book ready, I was at last quite tired of the contest; and shutting it, "I perceive," cried I, "that 20 none of you have a mind to be married, and I think we had as good go back again; for I suppose there will be no business done here to-day." This at once reduced them to reason. The Baronet and his lady were first married, and then my son and his lovely partner. 25

I had previously that morning given orders that a coach should be sent for my honest neighbor Flamborough and his family; by which means, upon our return to the inn, we had the pleasure of finding the two

Miss Flamboroughs alighted before us. Mr. Jenkinson gave his hand to the eldest, and my son Moses led up the other (and I have since found that he has taken a real liking to the girl, and my consent and bounty he shall have, whenever he thinks proper to demand them). We were no sooner returned to the inn, but numbers of my parishioners, hearing of my success, came to congratulate me; but among the rest were those who rose to rescue me, and whom I formerly rebuked with such sharpness. I told the story to Sir William, my son-in-law, who went out and reprov'd them with great severity; but finding them quite disheartened by his harsh reproof, he gave them half a guinea apiece to drink his health, and raise their dejected spirits.

Soon after this we were called to a very genteel entertainment, which was dressed by Mr. Thornhill's cook. And it may not be improper to observe, with respect to that gentleman, that he now resides, in quality of companion, at a relation's house, being very well liked, and seldom sitting at the side-table, except when there is no room at the other; for they make no stranger of him. His time is pretty much taken up in keeping his relation, who is a little melancholy, in spirits, and in learning to blow the French horn. My eldest daughter, however, still remembers him with regret; and she has even told me, though I make a great secret of it, that when he reforms she may be brought to relent. But to return, for I am not apt to digress thus; when we were to sit down to dinner our ceremonies were going to be renewed. The question was, whether my eldest daughter, as being a matron, should not sit above the two young brides; but the debate was cut short by my son George, who proposed that the company should sit indiscriminately, every gentleman by his lady. This was received 5 with great approbation by all, excepting my wife, who, I could perceive, was not perfectly satisfied, as she expected to have had the pleasure of sitting at the head of the table, and carving all the meat for all the company. But, notwithstanding this, it is impossible to describe 10 our good humor. I can't say whether we had more wit among us now than usual; but I am certain we had more laughing, which answered the end as well. One jest I particularly remember. Old Mr. Wilmot drinking to Moses, whose head was turned another way, my 15 son replied, "Madam, I thank you." Upon which the old gentleman, winking upon the rest of the company, observed, that he was thinking of his mistress; at which jest I thought the two Miss Flamboroughs would have died with laughing. As soon as dinner was over, 20 according to my old custom, I requested that the table might be taken away, to have the pleasure of seeing all my family assembled once more by a cheerful fireside. My two little ones sat upon each knee, the rest of the company by their partners. I had nothing now on this 25 side of the grave to wish for; all my cares were over; my pleasure was unspeakable. It now only remained that my gratitude in good fortune should exceed my former submission in adversity.

NOTES.

CHAPTER I.

PAGE 29, LINE 4. taken orders. Entered the service of the church as minister.

P. 29, l. 9. notable. "Careful, bustling."—J.<sup>1</sup> By some pronounced nōtable.

P. 29, l. 10, 11. read . . . without spelling. An accomplishment which many in higher station did not then possess.

P. 30, l. 3. elegant. "Nice; not coarse; not gross."—J. The word was in good use.

P. 30, l. 9. blue bed to the brown. From one room to another. Canopies of heavy colored stuff were hung over beds, and the bed was so conspicuous a part of the room as to give it a designation.

P. 30, l. 13. an historian. An is used by Goldsmith before many words beginning with an aspirated h; and is now retained only in cases like the present, where the h begins an unaccented syllable.

P. 30, l. 16. herald's office. A government office in England for granting coats of arms, and preserving genealogical records. It dates from the middle of the fifteenth century.

P. 30, l. 26. tulip. Undoubtedly a reference to the craze for tulip culture which arose in the Netherlands in 1640. When leaving Leyden in 1755, in almost a penniless condition, Goldsmith had sent his uncle a costly bunch of the precious roots.

P. 31, l. 26. progress. A journey in state.

P. 32, l. 23. for handsome is that handsome does. So far as I can discover, this saying is original with Goldsmith, yet Chaucer had said in Wife of Bathes Tale, l. 6752:—

"That he is gentil that doth gentil dedis."

<sup>1</sup> Dr. Samuel Johnson's Dictionary of the English Language.

PAGE 33, LINE 2. Hebe. Consult a classical dictionary.

P. 33, l. 19. bred. Trained up, educated.

P. 33, l. 20. Oxford. The oldest university of England, dating from the twelfth century. Its fame is shared by the University of Cambridge alone.

CHAPTER II.

PAGE 34, LINE 4. living. Property belonging to the church, the income of which constituted the clergyman's salary or support.

P. 34, l. 4, 5. thirty-five pounds a year. Four years later Goldsmith wrote in The Deserted Village, l. 143, of the preacher who was “passing rich with forty pounds a year.”

P. 34, l. 6. diocese. Many parishes presided over by a bishop.

P. 34, l. 7. temporalities. Annual income from property owned by the church, and at the disposal of the clergyman in charge, not subject to the civil courts.

P. 34, l. 10. curate. A clergyman employed to do the duties of the one holding the regular appointment.

P. 34, l. 19. Whiston. Wm. Whiston, a divine and mathematician, born in England in 1667. He succeeded Sir Isaac Newton as professor of mathematics at Cambridge, but was expelled from the university on account of his doubts concerning the doctrine of the Trinity. He translated Josephus.

P. 35, l. 2. monogamist. One who holds that a person should marry but once.

P. 35, l. 18. chimney-piece. “The ornamental piece around the fireplace.” Mantel.

P. 36, l. 5. settlement. Bestowment of property by a parent on a son or daughter about to marry.

P. 36, l. 22. prevent the ladies leaving. It was a custom then, as now, for the ladies to retire from the room after the food had been served, that the gentlemen might linger over the wine and conversation.

P. 36, l. 26. country dances. Not as opposed to city, but from the French contre, signifying across, opposite. The partners stood in lines facing each other. Let some pupil report to the class on the manners of the English clergy of a century ago.

PAGE 36, LINE 26. forfeits. A kind of game in which the loser forfeits or deposits some article to be redeemed by a sportive fine.

P. 36, l. 28. backgammon. The word is from the Welsh, and means "a little battle." The game is said to be a thousand years old. Shakespeare calls it "tables."

P. 37, l. 1. hit. A bet or stake.

P. 37, l. 3. quatre. (Pronounced kät.r.) Four-spot. The vicar wished to throw a four-spot, but instead of this the two dice showed the two-spot and the one five times running.

CHAPTER III.

PAGE 39, LINE 12. cure. From Latin cura, care. That portion of territory given over to the care of one clergyman; a parish.

P. 39, l. 16. salary. "From the Latin, sal, salt. Originally the money given to the Roman soldiers to buy salt, and so, generally, a pension or stipend."

P. 40, l. 28. Hooker. Richard Hooker, born in England in 1554, was educated for the church. He published a noteworthy book, Ecclesiastical Polity. Isaak Walton wrote his life, in which the incident mentioned here is recorded.

P. 41, l. 2. Jewel. Bishop of Salisbury, born 1522, a polemical writer. His Apology for the Church of England, in Latin, was translated into every European language, and is said to have had more effect in promoting the Reformation than any other book.

P. 41, l. 4. I have been young. Psalm 37: 25.

P. 42, l. 16. reckoning. An innkeeper's charge for food and lodging.

P. 42, l. 19. beadle. A parish officer, whose duties were to summon the vestrymen to a meeting, preserve order at church, wait on the clergy, etc.

P. 42, l. 27. laced. Trimmed with lace. "Adorned with gold or silver textures sewed on."—J.

P. 44, l. 9. seats. Landed estates with mansions.

P. 46, l. 9. little estimable. Little to be esteemed.

CHAPTER IV.

PAGE 48, LINE 6. polite. "Those with elegant manners."—J.

P. 48, l. 8. temperance. In its original sense, moderation. "Opposed to gluttony and drunkenness."—J.

P. 48, l. 11. Christmas carol. In commemoration of the song of the angels, heard by the shepherds at the Nativity. In England and Holland to this day a pretty custom is kept up of singing Christmas hymns in the streets very early on Christmas morning.

P. 48, l. 12. Valentine. Let some pupil give an account of its origin.

P. 48, l. 12. Shrovetide. The day before Ash Wednesday. So called from the shiving or confession appointed for that day, in preparation for the penitential season of Lent. Pancakes were eaten, as flesh was forbidden on Shrove Tuesday, and the bell which rang for service was called the pancake bell.

P. 48, l. 14. Michaelmas eve. Sept. 29, the festival of St. Michael, the guardian and protector of the church.

P. 48, l. 17. pipe and tabor. Fife and drum.

P. 49, l. 2. underwood. "Low trees that grow among the timber."—J. Undergrowth.

P. 49, l. 16. coppers. Cooking utensils made of copper.

P. 50, l. 19. Johnny Armstrong. A chieftain of the Scottish border who, at the head of a body of marauders, offered his services to King James V. in 1529. No favor was shown him, but he and his band were hanged on the nearest trees. This injustice called forth the ballad, which may be found in Child's English and Scottish Ballads, or in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry.

P. 50, l. 20. Barbara Allen. This old ballad may be found in the collections named above; also in Miss Bates's Ballad Book, Students' Series of English Classics. These ballads are still popular. Let some pupil read them to the class. Ballads were printed on broad sheets, and stuck up for decoration on the walls of cottages and ale-houses.

P. 50, l. 23. lessons. Scripture passages, — part of the service as arranged in The Book of Common Prayer.

P. 50, l. 27. sumptuary edicts. Look up the meaning. What does the Constitution of the United States say regarding such laws?

PAGE 51, LINE 2. bugles. Black bead-trimming for ladies' dresses.

P. 51, l. 2. catgut. The old dictionaries mention this as a kind of canvas on which embroidery was done.

P. 51, l. 3. paduasoy. A dress material of silk made in Padua.

P. 51, l. 13. faces patched. A custom of the time, which consisted in wearing bits of black court-plaster on the face to bring out its beauty by contrast.

P. 52, l. 7. shredding. Fringe-like trimming.

CHAPTER V.

PAGE 53, LINE 2. hedge of hawthorn. Line 13 in The Deserted Village makes reference to it: —

“The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade
For talking age and whispering lovers made.”

P. 53, l. 15. centaury. A plant used by the Centaurs for healing wounds. Look up Centaur in mythology. The common name is blue gentian.

P. 57, l. 21. That virtue which requires, etc. This single thought is so concisely expressed as to make it an epigram. Find another.

CHAPTER VI.

PAGE 59, LINES 12-14. Buck of Beverland, Patient Grissel, Catskin, Fair Rosamond's Bower. Names of stories. Buck of Beverland is obscure. For Patient Grissel, look in Chaucer's Clerk's Tale in Canterbury Tales. Catskin is an old ballad, the English form of which is Cinderella. The heroine dresses in catskins. Given in Bell's Ballads of the Peasantry. Fair Rosamond's Bower is alluded to in Tennyson's drama of Becket.

P. 59, l. 22, 23. “Well done, my good children!” A pretty lesson for the good preacher to show his children. When we recollect some events in Goldsmith's life, such touches become pathetic.

P. 61, l. 15. Marsyas. Consult a classical dictionary.

P. 62, l. 5. pasty. A meat-pie.

CHAPTER VII.

PAGE 63, LINE 7. chaplain. Many families of wealth maintained a chaplain and private chapel on their estates.

P. 63, l. 7. feeder. A steward, or perhaps feeder of the hounds.

P. 64, l. 1. St. Dunstan's. St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, an old church in London, having a clock which was an object of interest to visitors. Two large wooden figures of savages struck the quarter hours on a bell.

P. 64, l. 2, 3. jests of the rich . . . successful. What is meant?

P. 64, l. 17. tithes. A tenth part, collected by the church as a tax.

P. 64, l. 21. smoked him. Detected his wish for an argument. The allusion is to the detection of robbers by the smoke issuing from the place of concealment. "To smoke: to smell out; to find out."—J.

P. 65, l. 11, 12. concatenation of self-existence, etc. A satire on those who use "words of learned length and thundering sound."

P. 66, l. 6, 7. nor did he offer a single syllable more. In this episode, Oliver might be substituted for Moses, so closely is a characteristic of the author pictured. He was distrustful of his own powers in conversation, and "the right word never came." Dr. Johnson said of him, "What Goldsmith comically says of himself is very true, — he always gets the better when he argues alone; meaning that he is the master of a subject in his study, but, when he comes into company, grows confused, and is unable to talk."

P. 67, l. 9. free thinker. "A libertine; a contemner of religion."—J. Why would such a person be obnoxious to Dr. Primrose?

P. 68, l. 15. Thwackum and Square. Characters in The History of Tom Jones, a novel by Fielding.

P. 68, l. 18. Religious Courtship. By the same author as Robinson Crusoe. Give his name.

P. 68, l. 21. gooseberry-pie. The gooseberry is to this day a common fruit in England; and the conversion of it into pies, tarts, jelly, and wine was then considered evidence of housewifely skill.

CHAPTER VIII.

PAGE 70, LINE 5. Mr. Gay. John Gay, the poet, lived 1688-1732. The Beggar's Opera was his leading work.

P. 70, l. 6, 7. something so pathetic in the description. An old authority says, "Mr. Gay's letter, concerning the two lovers who were struck dead with the same flash of lightning, is a masterpiece of the sort."

P. 70, l. 10. Acis and Galatea of Ovid. In his Metamorphoses, 13, 750. Consult classical dictionary.

P. 70, l. 11. the use of contrast. Has our author a superior in this art? Select some examples of it, and of his pathos.

P. 70, l. 16. loading all their lines with epithet. Goldsmith characterized Gray's Elegy as "a very fine poem, but overloaded with epithet." Compare it with the ballad given here.

P. 71. The Hermit. What other poems by Goldsmith have you read? Some of his detractors said the poem was suggested by Bishop Percy's The Friar of Orders Gray; but Percy himself said The Hermit was written first, though both were founded on an old ballad. The Hermit was first published separately, with the title of Edwin and Angelina. Note the beauty and tenderness of the poem.

CHAPTER IX.

PAGE 79, LINE 5. under gentlemen. Serving-men.

P. 80, l. 2. roundabout. A kind of dance.

P. 80, l. 23. jingo. What is the modern use of the word? Does the Doctor's criticism still apply?

P. 81, l. 2. musical glasses. Strips of glass differing in size, and placed on a box so as to give the tones of the scale when struck. An old letter refers to them as drinking-glasses standing upright on a sounding-board, and made to vibrate by the moistened finger rubbed on the rim of the glass.

P. 82, l. 19. coup-de-main. French (pronounced cōō-de-mā'). A bold effort.

CHAPTER X.

PAGE 84, LINE 14. flourishing upon catgut. Embroidering. See note on catgut, p. 285.

P. 85, l. 2. sibyl. See classical dictionary.

P. 85, l. 15. sped. succeeded. Does the verb have the same meaning in Godspeed?

P. 85, l. 18-22. I . . . a Squire . . . I . . . a Lord. Bear in mind the gypsy's predictions, and later on note if they are fulfilled. Did Dr. Primrose believe in the dark art?

P. 86, l. 12-18. dreams . . . omens. Is there still belief in them? Give one. Consult the encyclopædia under the word astrology.

P. 87, l. 18. scrubs. "Mean fellows."—J.

P. 87, l. 27. blowzed. Flushed.

P. 87, l. 29. smock race. A race in which girls ran, the prize being a smock or undergarment usually decorated with ribbons.

P. 88, l. 10. wall-eyed. Having the white of the eye unusually large, and the sight small.

P. 88, l. 13. pillon. A cushion placed behind a saddle so that two persons could ride at the same time.

CHAPTER XI.

PAGE 90, LINE 2. burn nuts. Roast chestnuts. "They name the lad and lass to each particular nut as they lay them in the fire, and accordingly as they burn quietly together, or start from beside one another, the course and issue of the courtship will be."—ROBERT BURNS'S note on his poem, Hallowe'en.

P. 90, l. 5. suffered ourselves. Explain the expression.

P. 90, l. 7. lamb's wool. A drink of sweetened and spiced ale with baked apples, popularly indulged in at Hallowe'en in parts of England and Scotland.

P. 90, l. 8. connoisseur. See dictionary.

P. 90, l. 21. hot cockles. "A play in which one covers his eyes and guesses who strikes him."

PAGE 91, LINE 15. ballad-singer. Ballads were originally sung to the accompaniment of dancing; hence a voice "to deafen a ballad singer" is very loud.

P. 92, l. 1. prolocutor. One who speaks in the name of another.

P. 92, l. 19. Knights of the Garter. "It exceeds in majesty, honor, and fame all chivalrous orders in the world." Look up the legend of its origin, and find its connection with the motto on the British coat of arms.

P. 92, l. 23. rout. A company of people, — as an evening party.

P. 93, l. 2. valet de chambre. Suggest why the French expression is retained in the English.

P. 93, l. 7. fudge. Nonsense. "A word of contempt bestowed on one who says what is absurd or untrue."

P. 93, l. 23, 24. most lowest. Comment on this usage.

P. 94, l. 20. Thirty pounds and twenty-five guineas. Note by this little touch the quick-calculating mother.

P. 95, l. 9. They can read. A fair enumeration of the accomplishments of the few educated young ladies of the time. Cutting paper means making profile likenesses, after the manner of silhouettes.

P. 95, l. 10. cross and change. The cutting and shaping of garments. The reference is probably to cutting a piece from one side and changing it to the other, to make a gore.

CHAPTER XII.

PAGE 97, LINE 5. preferment. Advancement.

P. 97, l. 14. taste. People of taste, — in this case, people of social distinction.

P. 97, l. 18. quality. Rank.

P. 97, l. 19. entre nous. (Pronounced ãntɾ nõõ.) French for "between ourselves."

P. 98, l. 3. nalled them. Confined them to one point.

P. 99, l. 1. higgles. Persists like a peddler. "To be penurious in a bargain." — J.

P. 99, l. 10. deal box. Made of pine wood.

P. 99, l. 13, 14. gosling green. Yellowish green, like the catkin of the willow, or the gosling's down.

PAGE 99, LINE 14. tied his hair. Men and boys wore their hair long, and tied in a queue with a ribbon.

P. 100, l. 9, 10. by letters. The letters of the alphabet may have been stamped on the sheet of gingerbread.

P. 100, l. 13. weasel-skin. The weasel was an object of awe in Ireland.

P. 101, l. 3. repartee. Look up the meaning.

P. 101, l. 8. sell his hen of a rainy day. Make a bargain under unfavorable conditions.

P. 101, l. 23. touch them off. Does this mean he would "make an impression" on the people at the fair?

P. 101, l. 29. shagreen. A kind of leather with a rough surface, used in covering pocketbooks, etc.

P. 102, l. 18. A murrain take such trumpery. Give a paraphrase.

P. 102, l. 21. Marry. As in Shakespeare's plays, a mild oath; contraction of "By Mary." Compare "ods-fish," survival of the oaths used in the Middle Ages.

P. 103, l. 3. walked the fair. An obsolete expression, meaning to walk about the fair.

CHAPTER XIII.

PAGE 104, LINES 1, 2. to be fine. To aim at effect.

P. 106, l. 4. moralize this fable. Point out its moral lesson.

P. 106, l. 10. neuter. What other word might be employed?

P. 107, l. 29. economist. Here, one who manages judiciously.

P. 108, l. 13. Conscience is a coward. Will you agree?

CHAPTER XIV.

PAGE 109, LINE 17. first mercantile transactions. He belonged, of course, to the scholarly class, and so had little knowledge of bargaining.

P. 110, l. 6. paces. Gaits.

P. 110, l. 7. chapman. Peddler. "A cheapener; one that offers as a purchaser." — J.

P. 110, l. 10. spavin. Windgall, botts. Diseases peculiar to horses.

PAGE 110, LINE 15. hack. A jaded horse.

P. 110, l. 16. cut up for a dog-kennel. On the large estates a number of dogs were kept for hunting purposes, — sometimes forty or more, — and provision must be made for them. The sale of horse-meat for dogs and cats is common still in England.

P. 110, l. 21. St. Gregory. It is not easy to determine which one is meant.

P. 111, l. 9. Whistonian. See note, p. 282.

P. 112, l. 10. deuterogamy. The practice of second marriages.

P. 113, l. 7. Sanchoniathon. A historian of Phœnicia in the fourteenth century B.C.

P. 113, l. 7. Manetho. An Egyptian writer who lived in the third century B.C.

P. 113, l. 8. Berosus. A priest of Babylon, 300 B.C.

P. 113, l. 8. Ocellus Lucanus. A Greek philosopher of the school of Pythagoras, whose works were translated into Latin. They are all obscure writers.

P. 113, l. 9. Anarchon, etc. A quotation from the Greek rewritten in equivalent English letters. So ek to, etc., following. The latter expression, unless a misprint, is an interesting mistake on the part of Goldsmith. It is bad Greek, and cannot be translated as in the text. A conjectural translation would be "a guide to a book."

P. 113, l. 24. touchstone. A test; an interesting word to search out.

P. 114, l. 5. in fine. To what adverb is the phrase equivalent?

P. 114, l. 27. warm. In its old sense, well off, in easy circumstances.

P. 115, l. 3. ability. i.e., that he had funds to pay the draft.

P. 116, l. 20. aspere. Defame.

CHAPTER XV.

PAGE 117, LINE 6. abroad. Out-of-doors.

P. 117, l. 7. letter-case. A leather receptacle for letters, like a card-case.

P. 118, l. 1-17. the letter. Can you conjecture who wrote it?

P. 119, l. 4. ruminating. Meditating, pondering.

P. 120, l. 2. jest book. A book of jokes and funny stories.

PAGE 120, LINE 17. "An honest man," etc. Find the place where this line occurs.

P. 121, l. 2, 3. Flemish school . . . Roman pencil. The Flemish masters were known for their conventional adherence to nature and perfection of technique, but lack of genuine artistic conception. The Roman or Italian school was distinguished for its imaginative, æsthetic, and spiritual tone, the exaltation of genius. The Flemish school represented the realistic; the Roman, the idealistic.

P. 121, l. 2. animations. Works of art imbued with expression and vivacity.

CHAPTER XVI.

PAGE 124, LINE 17. piquet. (Pronounced pe-ke't.) A game of cards played by two or more persons.

P. 125, l. 3. If the cakes. Note the form of the expression, and the designing mother.

P. 125, l. 10. extremely of a size. Suggest a different expression.

P. 125, l. 25. limner. One who draws or paints.

P. 126, l. 19. stomacher. "An ornamental covering worn by women on the breast."—J.

P. 126, l. 22. Amazon. Explain.

P. 126, l. 23. green Joseph. Probably an allusion to Joseph's coat of many colors (Gen. xxxvii. 3). A garment made like a man's great-coat, usually with broad cape and buttoning down in front; worn in the eighteenth century, and later by women as a riding-habit.

P. 128, l. 3. scandal ever improves by opposition. Grows, increases. Washington's maxim was, "The best answer to a calumny is silence."

P. 129, l. 19. parts. Excellent qualities, talents.

CHAPTER XVII.

PAGE 134, LINE 7. brewing tubs. For making beer at home.

P. 134, l. 8, 9. Death and the Lady. In Bell's Ballads of the Peasantry.

P. 134, l. 18. elegy. Song of mourning. This had appeared in The Bee, the short-lived paper Goldsmith started as a weekly in 1759.

He also wrote "The Fear of Mad Dogs Ridiculed," one of a series of papers for the Public Ledger, a newspaper.

PAGE 136, LINE 16. Put the glass. Fill his glass.

P. 136, l. 22. Ranelagh. (Pronounced Rän'-e-lah.) Once a public gathering-place for amusement in London.

P. 136, l. 25. fairing. A trinket brought from the fair.

P. 136, l. 28. nymphs and swains. Who are they?

P. 138, l. 14. undone. Destroyed in a moral sense.

P. 140, l. 10. sallies of enthusiasm. Attempts at cheerfulness.

P. 140, l. 27. The first fault, etc. A good aphorism to remember.

CHAPTER XVIII.

PAGE 142, LINE 8. seat. Estate.

P. 144, l. 15. philanthropic bookseller. Mr. John Newberry, with whom Goldsmith had frequent dealings.

P. 144, l. 21. the history, etc. The book was Tommy Trip's History of Beasts and Birds. It is said to have been written by Goldsmith.

P. 145, l. 28. present theatrical writers. Name two popular comedies of which Goldsmith is the author.

P. 146, l. 6. that go down. Are well received.

P. 147, l. 6. mob. Crowd.

P. 147, l. 10. chaplain. The clergymen of the Church of England wear a distinctive dress.

P. 147, l. 18. parliament man. Member of Parliament.

CHAPTER XIX.

PAGE 149, LINES 14, 15. another guess manner. Austin Dobson points out the meaning thus: "other guess, other guise, otherwise."

P. 149, l. 17. pillory. Was this method of punishment common in England at that time? The word originally meant a gazing-place.

P. 149, l. 21. ignorants. Notice the unusual use of the word.

P. 150, l. 9. Levellers. Radicals in the time of Charles I. and the Commonwealth, who wanted all men to be placed on a level with respect to eligibility to office.

PAGE 152, LINE 10. venal. Those who are disposed to sell.

P. 152, l. 13. polity. System of society.

P. 152, l. 14. Cartesian. Referring to the philosophy of Descartes, who represented the creation of the universe as the result of rotary motions which he termed vortices.

P. 153, l. 25, 26. the laws govern the poor, etc. Goldsmith expresses the same sentiment in The Traveller, line 386:—

“Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the law.”

P. 153, l. 27. sacred monarchy. A reference to the divine right of kings.

P. 154, l. 13. Jesuit. A priestly order in the Roman Catholic Church, whose members were learned and skilled in argument.

P. 154, l. 20, 21. saddled with wooden shoes. Impeded by heavy weights,—a reference to the wooden shoes or sabots worn by the French peasants.

P. 157, l. 1. Fair Penitent. A tragedy by Nicholas Rowe, born 1673.

CHAPTER XX.

PAGE 159, LINE 5. wallet. A small bag or sack in which to carry the necessary articles for a journey.

P. 160, l. 15. usher. “An under teacher.”—J. Goldsmith had some unpleasant experience as an usher in Dr. Milner’s school.

P. 160, l. 17. Sardonic grin. What does it mean?

P. 160, l. 20, 21. an anodyne necklace. A charm against children’s diseases. Here a slang expression for a halter.

P. 160, l. 21. Newgate. A famous prison of London, built about 1100.

P. 161, l. 6, 7. to turn a cutler’s wheel. To learn the knife-grinder’s trade.

P. 161, l. 13. jog-trot men. Slow-moving men.

P. 161, l. 21. antiqua mater of Grub-street. “Ancient Mother” of Grub Street, referring to the fact that on this celebrated street in London many poor authors had lived and produced their best works,—so the antiqua mater is the spirit which fostered literary genius there.

P. 162, l. 1. paradoxes. Define.

PAGE 162, LINE 29. Propertius. A Latin poet born 52 B.C.

P. 163, l. 9. dowager. A widow; the term usually applied only to gentlewomen of high rank.

P. 164, l. 4. Having a mind too proud, etc. This is a portrayal of Goldsmith's own experiences and feelings.

P. 164, l. 17. easy simplicity of my style . . . harmony of my periods. Are these characteristics of Goldsmith's writings?

P. 164, l. 21. Philautos, etc. These are Greek adjectives transferred to English, and personified to represent other authors in general. Philautos means selfish, a lover of one's self; Philaethes, truthful, a lover of truth; Philelutheros, free spirited, a lover of freedom; Philanthropos, benevolent, a lover of mankind. These words are used also in his Essays of 1765.

P. 164, l. 26, 27. inversely as their merits. Explain.

P. 165, l. 4. St. James's Park. In London. Note the form of the possessive, — the present English and the best American usage.

P. 165, l. 24, 25. tattering a kip. A slang expression which meant making merriment.

P. 166, l. 7. taste for pimping and pedigree. For seeking pleasures for another in a low sense, and for devotion to people of rank because of their rank.

P. 168, l. 25. chariot. The word was used in Goldsmith's time for carriage.

P. 169, l. 21. slaves. Probably for plantation labor in the New World. In what colonies were they employed?

P. 171, l. 4. deuce. A demon, spectre; an interesting word to look up.

P. 171, l. 11, 12. I found myself . . . a stranger. The remainder of the chapter is the outline of the journey upon which Goldsmith had based his poem, The Traveller. Read it.

P. 171, l. 26. Louvain. A city of Belgium containing a university in which Goldsmith was once a student.

P. 172, l. 4. heartened. Suggest a synonym.

P. 172, l. 15. desideratum. Latin for a thing desired.

P. 172, l. 21, 22. doctor's cap and gown. The different academic degrees in foreign universities are designated by the color or trimmings of the robe of the person so honored.

P. 172, l. 23. fiorin. Value forty cents. See what the encyclopædia says of it.

PAGE 173, LINE 5, 6. I played . . . merry tunes. See line 247, et seq., The Traveller:—

“ And haply, though my harsh touch, faltering still,
But mocked all tune, and inarred the dancer's skill,
Yet would the village praise my wondrous power,
And dance, forgetful of the noontide hour.”

P. 174, l. 1. to collect pictures, etc. Most families of rank and fortune possessed some collection of rare and valuable articles. Manuscripts and works of famous artists have thus been held in private families for centuries.

P. 174, l. 7. cognoscento. Written cognoscente in the dictionary. It means one who knows, as applied to matters of art. Compare connoisseur.

P. 174, l. 12. Pietro Perugino. A famous Italian painter of the fifteenth century. His works are considered of the highest merit. Raphael was his pupil. Learn the pronunciation of the name.

P. 176, l. 18. theses. Debates or essays on some particular theme.

P. 177, l. 20. was in keeping; i.e., with the personality of the player.

CHAPTER XXI.

PAGE 179, LINE 10. country dances. See note, p. 282.

P. 179, l. 21. instances. Here invitations, solicitations.

P. 180, l. 2. commissions. Could they be purchased in the British army?

P. 180, l. 10, 11. This was a favor, etc. Rewrite this sentence.

P. 180, l. 17. least. How written now?

P. 180, l. 27. “. . . thou art going.” Notice the solemn style of address used partially throughout the paragraph.

P. 181, l. 2. Lord Falkland. He was killed at Newbury in 1643, while fighting on the king's side, — Charles I.

P. 182, l. 27. cross. Coins of the day were often stamped with a cross.

P. 183, l. 7. sassarā'ra. An intensive word, as one would say, “Out she shall pack with a vengeance.” It is a corruption of the Latin certiorari, meaning a legal writ by which a party may have sure and speedy justice.

PAGE 183, LINE 9. sign of the Harrow. In England to this day inns are sometimes designated by carved or painted figures, but more commonly so at an earlier date, when few people could read.

P. 186, l. 6. in orders. In the ministry of the Church of England.

P. 186, l. 22. promise. How about the ethics of this?

CHAPTER XXII.

PAGE 190, LINES 1, 2. It was night, etc. How skilfully the picture is drawn in this paragraph! Who is the peer of Goldsmith in the portrayal of tender home scenes? Were these ideals realized in his own life?

P. 190, l. 21. It was now near midnight, etc. Would you designate any incident in the paragraph as unlikely or not plausible?

P. 190, l. 22, 23. with unutterable happiness. See note on contrast, p. 287.

P. 192, l. 20. untutored benevolence. Explain the meaning.

P. 193, l. 18. I entreat, etc. How can you characterize this speech of the clergyman and father?

CHAPTER XXIII.

PAGE 195, LINE 1. assiduity. Suggest a synonym.

P. 196, l. 13. romancing. Dealing with the marvellous and fictitious.

P. 198. Find a grammatical error in the first half of the page.

CHAPTER XXIV.

PAGE 203, LINE 23. driving. French says, in his Realities of Irish Life, "The term driving was applied to a summary process for recovering rent, which the law in those days conferred on the landlord, whereby he could drive to the pound the cattle of any tenant who owed any rent whatever, . . . and the cattle so impounded might be kept in durance until the rent was paid."

PAGE 204, LINE 25. instruments used in the art of war. "Caltrops, or radiating spikes fastened to a ball. They were thrown on the ground to impede the advance of cavalry by injuring the horses' legs." — AUSTIN DOBSON.

P. 205, l. 3. my incapacity. Recall Goldsmith's predicament when he sold the manuscript of this book.

CHAPTER XXV.

PAGE 207, LINE 20. multitude. Comment on the use of the word here.

P. 208, l. 5. "What! my friends." What noble trait does the vicar exhibit in this speech?

P. 208, l. 12. return back. What kind of an expression is this? Find another in the next paragraph.

P. 209, l. 5. felons and debtors. Distinguish between them.

P. 209, l. 13. perquisite. Fee.

P. 210, l. 15. to let him see that I was a scholar.

"I still had hopes, for pride attends us still,
Amid the swains to show my book-learned skill."

The Deserted Village, l. 89.

CHAPTER XXVI.

PAGE 214, LINE 9. declining sister's health. Is this the proper order?

P. 214, l. 13. your wages. Those in jail for debt, unreasonable as it may seem, were obliged to supply their own clothing and food.

P. 214, l. 19. against to-morrow. Give a synonym for this old expression.

P. 215, l. 14. service. Dr. Primrose was a clergyman of the Church of England, and so would read from the Prayer Book.

P. 217, l. 25. a dungeon seem a palace. It suggests the lines of Richard Lovelace, To Althea from Prison:—

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for a hermitage.

If I have freedom in my love,
 And in my soul am free,
 Angels alone that soar above
 Enjoy such liberty."

CHAPTER XXVII.

PAGE 221, LINE 20. some were penitent and all attentive.

"Truth from his lips prevailed with double sway,
 And fools who came to scoff remained to pray."

The Deserted Village, l. 179.

Compare the characters of the village preacher in the poem and Dr. Primrose.

P. 222, l. 1. tobacco-stoppers. For pushing tobacco into the bowl of a pipe.

P. 223, l. 15. a great penalty. At this time over one hundred and fifty offences were punishable in England by death.

"The stealer of sheep and the slayer of men Were strung up together again and again."

CHARLES MACKAY'S poem, The Days That are Gone.

P. 225, l. 3. stuck up for long torture. "As if impaled." — SPRAGUE.

P. 225, l. 9. very little blood will serve. Have these arguments prevailed in present generations?

CHAPTER XXVIII.

PAGE 229, LINE 4. meet with. Could the preposition be dropped without detracting from the meaning or balance of the sentence?

P. 229, l. 11. so that these hopes. Can you improve this sentence?

P. 236, l. 6. arrant little baggages. A playful reproach.

P. 236, l. 21. a noise like that of a tumult. This incident is one of the many extravagant turns of the story which mar its naturalness.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A thoughtful chapter in Goldsmith's best diction. As you read it, keep in mind the differences of rank in England of that day. The luxury of the rich was extravagant, the misery of the poor hopeless. Dr. Primrose, having all the education of the former, was feeling more keenly the distress of the latter class.

CHAPTER XXX.

PAGE 248, LINE 9. canvas. Used for coach windows instead of glass.

P. 250, l. 13. well-dressed dishes. Well-prepared foods.

P. 252, l. 3. fellow. Used of an ignoble person in a contemptuous sense.

P. 252, l. 14. counter. Run a risk which offsets the loss of the other person.

P. 255, l. 6. in the commission of the peace. A county justice.

P. 255, l. 6. I undertake to secure you. I agree to become answerable for your act.

CHAPTER XXXI.

PAGE 257, LINE 15. object. Put forward.

P. 258, l. 19. subordinate tyranny. The oppression of his servants.

P. 259, l. 23. Tyburn. A noted prison near one of the city gates of London where executions took place.

P. 265, l. 18. decorums. Rules of conduct.

P. 269, l. 4. stiver. A Dutch coin worth an English penny.

P. 269, l. 25. squibs. Small explosives; here, sarcastic and reflecting speeches.

P. 270, l. 27. That there Squire. This was illiterate even then.

P. 271, l. 6. cloth. Used in common conversation to designate the clergy.

P. 271, l. 15. "and shook their chains."—CONGREVE: Mourning Bride, Act I., Scene iv.

CHAPTER XXXII.

PAGE 277, LINE 2. a very solemn ceremony.

"But all his serious thoughts had rest in heaven."

The Deserted Village, l. 188.

P. 277, l. 5. homilies. Discourses or instructions, as distinct from the more formal thesis or essay.

P. 278, l. 6. numbers of my parishioners. Why is numbers plural?

P. 279, l. 2. sit above. Nearer the seat of honor at the head of the table. Precedence at table has always been one of the most important points of etiquette.

P. 279, l. 28. my gratitude. A fine summary of the spirituality of the good Dr. Primrose. Read again of his devotion to the "Heavenly Corrector," end of chapter xxv., and to the "Giver of joy," end of chapter xxxi.

11
B
C
C
C

The Students' Series of English Classics.

DURABLY AND HANDSOMELY BOUND IN CLOTH AND CHEAP IN PRICE.

SOME OF THE BOOKS.

Most of them required for Admission to College.

Bates's Ballad Books . . . . .	50 cents
Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America . . . . .	35 "
Carlyle's Essay on Burns . . . . .	35 "
Carlyle's Diamond Necklace . . . . .	35 "
Coleridge's Ancient Mariner . . . . .	25 "
De Quincey's Revolt of the Tartars . . . . .	35 "
De Quincey's Joan of Arc and other selections . . . . .	35 "
Dryden's Palamon and Arcite . . . . .
George Eliot's Silas Marner . . . . .	35 "
Goldsmith's Traveler and Deserted Village . . . . .	25 "
Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield . . . . .	50 "
Johnson's History of Rasselas . . . . .	35 "
Longfellow's Evangeline . . . . .	35 "
Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal . . . . .
Matthew Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum . . . . .	25 "
Macaulay's Essay on Lord Clive . . . . .	35 "
Macaulay's Second Essay on the Earl of Chatham . . . . .	35 "
Macaulay's Essays on Milton and Addison . . . . .	35 "
Macaulay's Life of Samuel Johnson . . . . .	25 "
Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome . . . . .
Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I and II . . . . .	35 "
Milton's L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Comus, and Lycidas . . . . .	25 "
Pope's Iliad, Books I, VI, XXII, and XXIV . . . . .	35 "
Scott's Marmion . . . . .	35 "
Scott's Lady of the Lake . . . . .	35 "
Scudder's Introduction to Writings of John Ruskin . . . . .	50 "
Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream . . . . .	35 "
Shakespeare's As You Like It . . . . .	35 "
Shakespeare's Macbeth . . . . .	35 "
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice . . . . .	35 "
Sir Roger de Coverley Papers from the Spectator . . . . .	35 "
Thomas's Selections from Washington Irving . . . . .	50 "
Tennyson's Elaine . . . . .	25 "
Tennyson's Princess . . . . .	35 "
Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration . . . . .	25 "

Any of the above books sent postpaid on receipt of price. Usual discount on quantities. Correspondence Solicited.

LEACH, SHEWELL & SANBORN, Publishers,
BOSTON. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

The Students' Series of English Classics.

EMINENT SCHOLARSHIP COMBINED WITH LARGE BUSINESS EXPERIENCE.

SOME OF THE EDITORS.

- Frank T. Baker, Teachers' College, New York City.
Katharine Lee Bates, Wellesley College.
Henry H. Belfield, Chicago Manual Training School.
Henry W. Boynton, Phillips Andover Academy.
Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., Instructor in Literature.
James Chalmers, Wisconsin Normal School.
Albert S. Cook, Yale University.
W. W. Curtis, Principal of High School, Pawtucket, R. I.
Warren F. Gregory, High School, Hartford, Conn.
Louise M. Hodgkins, late of Wellesley College.
Fannie M. McCauley, Winchester School, Baltimore.
W. A. Mozier, High School, Ottawa, Ill.
Mary Harriott Norris, Instructor in Literature.
F. V. N. Painter, Roanoke College.
D. D. Pratt, High School, Portsmouth, Ohio.
Warwick J. Price, St. Paul's School.
J. G. Riggs, School Superintendent, Plattsburg, N. Y.
A. S. Roe, late Principal of High School, Worcester, Mass.
Fred N. Scott, University of Michigan.
Vida D. Scudder, Wellesley College.
L. Dupont Syle, University of California.
Isaac Thomas, Principal of High School, New Haven, Conn.
James Arthur Tufts, Phillips Exeter Academy.
William K. Wickes, Principal of High School, Syracuse, N. Y.
Mabel C. Willard, Instructor, New Haven, Conn.

LEACH, SHEWELL & SANBORN, Publishers,
BOSTON. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

